Smoke was observed to be issuing from the roof of the Theatre Royal, Portsmouth, on Tuesday afternoon, and flames were found to be raging at the back of the gallery and bursting out round the skylight. They were soon extinguished by the local fire brigade, no serious damage being done by water to the auditorium. The cause of the outbreak is presumed to be the heat of the sun's rays on the roofing slates.

The rustic lovers, Silvius and Phœbe, were extremely well played by Mr. M. A. Wetherell and Miss Evelyn Marthèze. Miss Betty Castle was a bright and charming Celia; and Miss Grete Hahn gave a clever and consistent performance as Audrey. Misses Pourtales, Hamber, and Marjorie Day completed a most excellent cast. The World, in an article entitled "The Green Fly: A pest of social charity," exposes some of the abuses of fashionable charity. "When at rehearsals and preliminaries a party of, say, a hundred people lunch and dine together and 'do themselves' passably well, it should be obvious after a moment's thought, that someone has to foot the bill. Three years ago the amateur organisers of a philanthropic entertainment that had a great social success met twice or three times a week for a month to confer, and the conference refreshed itself after its labours by dining together at a fashionable restaurant. It was an unusually flagrant example, and one, there is no doubt, due mainly to want of thought; but the sum those conferences cost the charity concerned was—well, not altogether negligible.

"It is obvious that a chance assortment of amateurs, usually an unwieldy one, is rarely competent to undertake the executive duties of organising an enterprise that may often involve the engagement of dozens of employees—the hewers of wood and drawers of water behind the scenes—the expenditure of a considerable sum, the necessary correspondence, and constant attention to a hundred and one trifling but essential details."

Miss Katie Johnson, who, it will be remembered, played Billy so charmingly in Billy's Little Love Affair, recently on tour, has been seriously ill for some little time past, and had to undergo an operation for appendicitis. Mr. Charles Frohman, writing to Sports of the Times, says:—"To have four successful American plays in London during one season—Brewster's Millions, Mrs. Wiggs, The Earl of Pawtucket, and The Truth—is remarkable, and I am so pleased with the financial as well as the artistic results that I shall take over The Three of Us, with Ethel Barrymore, if she wishes to appear in London; Caught in the Rain, with William Collier; and The Heir to The Hoorah, with an English star and an American company. I have engaged Joseph Coyne for America to star in Toddles, which has had a year's run in London. There is more demand than ever for good American plays. American dramatists are now the only ones who are touching a human note. Even what we call local points are as appreciated by the English as by the American audiences."

Miss Grace George, who has made such a success at the Duke of York's Theatre in Divorçons, did her first stage work under Mr. Charles Frohman in The New Boy and The Girl I Left Behind Me. In the latter she was associated with Miss Rose Coghlan, Miss Louise Beaudet, Mr. Aubrey Boucicault, and the late John T. Sullivan. She became a star in 1899-1900, acting first in an adaptation of the younger Dumas' play of Diane de Lys, called Countess Chiffon. She afterwards appeared in Her Majesty, Under Southern Skies, Pretty Peggy, Abigail, The Marriage of William Ashe, The Richest Girl in the World, and Clothes, all produced by her; and she gave revivals of Frou-Frou in 1902 and Divorçons, 1907. She was the Louise of the 1904 "all-star" revival of The Two Orphans, with Miss Clara Morris, Miss Annie Irish, Miss Margaret Illington, Mrs. Le Moyne, Miss Sarah Truax, Mr. Kyrle Bellew, Mr. Charles Warner, Mr. J. Ada Christina, Lady Fairfax Lucy, is twenty-fourth in descent from Thurstan de Charlcote, whose grandson was the first of the Charlcotes to assume the name of Lucy. The great-grandson of John of Gaunt's Sir Thomas Lucy was the great-grandfather of the other Sir Thomas, whose deer tradition makes the youthful Shakespeare poach, and who figures in consequence as Justice Shallow.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

An Imaginary Trust.

THE report of an international Theatre Trust engineered from America, has evoked some interesting remarks from our leading theatrical managers. Sir Charles Wyndham said to a representative of the Pall Mall Gazette: "A trust is too commercial. Besides, there should be no trusts in art; they would strangle it at once. I don't see that art can be developed by trusts in the same way that it can and is by individual exertion, where personal ambition comes in, and, if you like, personal vanity. With trusts everything becomes a business; you see that in their productions. Trusts have no special aim towards high art; they simply take what they get—one week it may be Shakespeare, and in the next the fastest of musical comedies." Mr. H. Beerbohm Tree said: "I am inclined to be sceptical concerning the proposal; indeed, I doubt whether the scheme will ever come off, and I seriously question whether it would be a good thing if it did. I should prefer, however, to know more about it before expressing a decided opinion, but my attitude at the moment is one of scepticism."

"I seem to have heard something about trusts lately," said Mr. Cyril Maude, "but of this one I am dreadfully ignorant. What is it? I assure you I know nothing whatever about it. I have never been approached by anybody, and the association of my name with the scheme is as surprising as the tardy coming of the sunshine. Mr. Frohman, whom I saw just before he sailed for America, said not a word about it, and so far as I am concerned it is a deep, dark, mystery." Mr. George Edwardes said: "There is not, so far as I am concerned, a word of truth in the proposal. When Mr. Erlanger was last in England he said that the last thing he should think of would be to interfere with theatrical matters in this country, as he had more than he could very well do in America. His firm would certainly never come over to England to interfere in any way."

Miss Terry's First Marriage.

MISS ELLEN TERRY, in this week's M.A.P., describes how she left the stage and married. The popular actress adds: "I was not quite sixteen years old, too young to be married even in those days, when everyone married early. But I was delighted, and my parents were delighted, although the disparity of age between my husband and me was very great. It all seems now like a dream, not a clear dream, but a fitful one which in the morning one tries in vain to tell. And even if I could tell it, I would not. I was happy, because my face was the type which the great artist who married me loved to paint. I remember sitting to him in armour—he was painting his Sir Galahad—for hours and hours, and never realising that it was heavy until I fell forward fainting! The day of my wedding it was very cold. Something always makes a woman remember what she wore on the important occasions of her life. I had on this day a silk dress, which had been designed by Holman Hunt, and a quilted white bonnet with a sprig of orange-blossom. I was wrapped in a beautiful Indian shawl. Then I 'went away' in a sealskin jacket with coral buttons and a little sealskin cap. I cried a great deal and Mr. Watts said, 'Don't cry. It makes your nose swell.' The day I left home to be married I 'tubbed' all the children and washed their hair, and brushed and combed it till it looked like spun glass."

Smells and Sanctity.

"WELL, Mr. Tree," said Bishop Welldon, Dean of Manchester (quoted in the Morning Leader), to the famous actor, next whom he was sitting at a Manchester luncheon, "what have you been doing to-day?" "I have been for a long motor drive, and I have lost a bet," replied Mr. Tree. "What was the bet?" inquired the dean. "That we should pass through 400 different odours," said Mr. Tree; "and we only counted 399." "Ah, you missed the odour of sanctity," retorted the dean.

Smoking and Sketches.

"I CANNOT imagine," says Mr. George Alexander, in an interview in the Daily News, "that the day will ever come when smoking will be allowed in theatres. The result would be absolutely fatal to dramatic productions of any kind. For these reasons, there must and there will always exist a distinction between the theatre and the music hall and the actor and the variety artist. It is merely a question of difference between two branches of art, for socially, as I have already said, the members of the two professions entertain no prejudices against one another."

Charles Manners's Cottages.

MR. CHARLES MANNERS, continuing his scheme for artistic yet convenient labourers' cottages, writes to the Express:—"I should like us not to lose sight of the point we started from, and that is to get suggestions from the actual people who have to live in cottages, and who alone know of the discomforts. As one of the public, I have already seen those pretty, artistic houses, cottages, mansions with beautiful twining rose-trees and cosy corners, in the 'flesh,' but I am afraid in very many cases they didn't look half so well as they do in the 'spirit.' One old person says he will purchase a cottage out and out if he can find one with broad treads to the staircase, as he always goes up and down the stairs in the present cottages in fear of his life. I am tiling the front part of the house and slating the back; the difference of cost will only be £1."

Cheap but Distasteful.

MR. JOSEPH R. GRISMER, an American manager, recently benefited $4.50 by the awakening of a Philadelphia conscience. He received a money-order for the amount by mail, with this note: "With my wife and daughter, I saw you in The New South in 1892 in the Broad-street Theatre here. We occupied the best seats, but I did not pay for them, taking advantage of the confusion of the ticket-seller harassed by a big line of buyers, to walk away from the window without settling. I suppose part of the money belongs to the theatre, theoretically; but I prefer to assume that the ticket-seller did not make good your share of the loss sustained by my dishonesty." A postscript said: "I ought to add that I did not like the show."

Callous and Indifferent.

MR. ALGERNON ASHTON writes:—"A house especially interesting and memorable to all music-lovers and worshippers of famous men was No. 103, Great Portland-street, for it was here that the illustrious German composer, Carl Maria von Weber, breathed his last on June 5, 1826. A tablet recording this fact was placed there not very many years ago by the Incorporated Society of Musicians. As the house was strongly built and by no means dilapidated-looking, the idea that it might be in any immediate danger of demolition never entered my mind; yet, when walking down Great Portland-street the other day, what was my dismay and horror when I discovered that the house in which the creator of Der Freischütz, Oberon, and other immortal works passed the last few weeks of his life had disappeared for ever! But how strange that not a single newspaper which has come under my notice should have deemed it worth while to inform its readers of the ruthless destruction of one of the most historical landmarks in the whole metropolis! What shameful indifference and callousness!"

PLAYERS OF THE PERIOD.

MRS. WALTER BENTLEY.

This popular lady began her stage career by singing at "at homes" and joining several good amateur clubs in London, doing much work in this way with Mrs. Lennox Brown's Busy Bees. Sometimes she "walked on" at different theatres, and undertook occasionally parts for the benefit of worthy charitable objects, thus gaining good experience. She studied elocution under that clever master Mr. Herman Vezin, fencing in the Angelo School of Arms, the art of pantomime with the late Mr. Alfred Neilson, and dancing and deportment with a well-known lady who prepares ladies for Court presentations. To enumerate all the parts played by this accomplished lady would scarcely be possible within the limits of this article, but we may mention that she has played all Shakespeare's heroines and Richard III. Being a good swordswoman, she was immensely praised for her sword combat in the part of Joan of Arc. A fine combat, indeed, was that between the Pucelle of Domrémy and the Earl of Suffolk over the standard.

Besides her Shakespearean heroines, Mrs. Bentley has appeared in most of the old English and modern comedies, and as leading lady in the following dramas: The Conscript, Is She Guiltless? Half-Mast High, The Woman of the People, The Wages of Sin, Hoodman Blind, The World Against Her, The Ring of Iron, The Workman, Rob Roy, Jeanie Deans, Lady Audley's Secret, East Lynne,

MRS. WALTER BENTLEY.

The Flowers of the Forest, Green Bushes, Jane Shore, Mary Queen of Scots, Kenilworth, Camille, and Frou-Frou. She created in the provinces Max Goldberg's Nell Gwynne in the play of that name, and Mary, Princess of England, in Mr. J. W. Boulding's The White Queen, also Queen Elizabeth in The Double Rose. These last two are her pet parts.

She starred for four months in the American drama Lost in New York, taking heavy character. This was followed by a six months' tour with Mr. J. F. Sheridan's When the Lamps are Lighted, playing a powerful leading rôle. Then came a stock season of eight weeks with Mr. Drew Mackintosh, to play a number of Mrs. John Wood's comedy parts. She was afterwards engaged to support the well-known actor, Mr. Charles Collette, in What Happened to Jones, appearing with this gentleman in a very important rôle for just on two years, and returning several times for special weeks after the long tour had ended. Miss Ida Molesworth and Mr. Mark Blow then secured her for a special tour of the principal cities in their beautiful production of In the King's Name, in which Mrs. Bentley had the leading rôle of the Duchess of Rockingham, getting great praise from the Manchester and Dublin press for her performance of this difficult part.

Then came a special tour with Mr. C. W. Somerset, supporting him as Mme. Fosco in The Woman in White, never speaking through three acts, as the dumb wife. Thus the early training in the art of pantomime came to her aid, and she was most highly complimented by Mr. Somerset and the press. She also appeared with the same clever artist as Lady Dragnette in The Sorrows of Satan. A nine months' starring engagement ensued as Eleanor, Queen of Henry II., in A Queen's Vengeance. Mrs. Bentley had her first experience of two-shows-a-night when she fulfilled a week's special engagement at the Grand, Islington, in the leading rôle, Risca Mallinson, in A Wrecker of Men—a long, trying part, with many changes of dress. It was very hard work. Recently she concluded a very comfortable starring engagement of nearly five months with Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Miller's fine drama, A Throne of Terror, in which she took the part of Victoria D'Almonti, the spy of Robespierre. She is to play a special engagement in the autumn in the most successful drama entitled The Tyrant, by Mr. Fred C. Somerfield.

AT the Council meeting of the Actors' Association on Tuesday Mr. Frederick Morland was in the chair, and Mr. Henry W. Moto (hon. solicitor), Messrs. Arthur Applin, Cecil Brooking, Fewlass Llewellyn, Roy Horniman, and Chas. Cruikshanks (secretary) were present. The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed. The hon. solicitors reported they had had interviews with three members and advised them. The Chairman read a letter from Mr. Holmes-Gore to Mr. Lewis Casson. It was proposed by Mr. Cecil Brooking, seconded by Mr. Arthur Applin, and agreed, that Mr. Holmes-Gore be thanked for his letter, and informed that the words "by request" appended to the names of three of the vice-presidents who signed the letter resigning membership did not mean by request of the Association. The secretary reported receipt of acknowledgment of his letter of June 18 last to the Theatrical Managers' Association, stating that it would be brought before the next Council meeting, the date of which was not yet fixed. Mr. Harry Cottell was nominated as a candidate for election as a member of the Actors' Association.

MR. EDITOR,—Sir,—In your notice of the theatrical garden party at Chelsea Hospital in your last Saturday's issue, you mention my name as Clown Leitz, which is spelt incorrectly. By kindly correcting this you will greatly oblige—Yours faithfully, FRED ZIETZ.

"THE SONG OF THE TORCH."

Toledano ..... MR. LAWSON BUTT
Count von Habsfeldt ..... MR. A. E. ANSON
Hartmann ..... MR. HYLTON ALLEN
Von Rosnitz ..... MR. CECIL BROOKING
Koppe ..... MR. ROBERT GREY
Heinrich ..... MR. HERBERT STANDING, JUN.
Countess von Habsfeldt ..... MISS EDITH OLIVE Fernande ..... MISS INEZ BENSUSAN
Madeleine Rosenthal ..... MISS DORIS DIGBY
Mme. Favelle ..... MISS MARY ALLESTREE
Esther ..... MISS BELLE TRAVERS
Annette ..... MISS RUBY SHAWE

While Mr. Ion Perdicaris's drama shows inexperience in the technical part of the playwright's craft, it possesses a fair amount of interest, and reveals knowledge in the author of the curious period when Prussia, under the armèd heel of Napoleon, was planning resistance to the Conqueror by the aid of the secret society known as the Tugenbund, or League of Virtue. The complications which occur when the government of a country is keeping up appearances with its tyrant while the people are plotting rebellion form the basis of The Song of the Torch. The average playgoer is not intimately acquainted with the history of Germany in 1808, and a little more explanation would have greatly improved the exposition, which is rather inept and tedious. When once we are launched on the stream of the story, however, it is quite comprehensible. The Jews and their racial pride have a good deal to do with the plot. The hero, Toledano, an advocate living in Koeningsberg, and one of the "chosen people," has fallen in love with the Countess von Habsfeldt, who is unfortunate in the possession of a bad husband. The Count, who sticks at nothing, has caused to be purloined by his mistress, Fernande, certain jewels of his wife's; and the Countess comes to Toledano's chambers to consult him as her solicitor. Toledano is an ardent member of the Tugenbund, and his enthusiasm in the cause of liberty is only equalled by his admiration for the lady. After her departure, Toledano is visited by Fernande, who offers her aid—it is suggested that she cherishes a hopeless passion for the advocate—and finally goes out scorned and threatening. In the second act the Count presses his odious attentions upon the Countess's companion, a young girl called Madeleine Rosenthal, and is defied by a student named Hartmann, Toledano's friend and confidant. Here is introduced "The song of the torch," a lyric in praise of Liberty, which is sung in chorus by the crowd outside the Habsfeldt mansion. The Countess appears with Toledano on the balcony of the house and harangues the rioters, for which she is placed under arrest. The third act takes place at the house of Mme. Favelle, the mother of Toledano. Fernande bribes an old servant to let her disguise herself in the dress of a domestic, and thus overhears a conversation between Mme. Favelle and a courier, to whom she confides important despatches concerning the plans of the party of Liberty. The adventuress betrays the secret to her employer, and the documents are taken from the courier by the police. Toledano and the Countess meet, and exchange vows of affection; but the liaison is denounced by Mme. Favelle, and the Count, discovering it, strikes Toledano on the cheek with his glove. A duel in the park at Castle Habsfeldt is the result; but before it takes place we see the Countess dogged by two mad-doctors, engaged by the Count to certify her insanity. She is subject to "visions," one of which she describes at length. Finally, she faints, and the duel takes place while she is unconscious. Toledano is in danger from the Count's sword; but Fernande, who has at last quarrelled with her employer, stabs him in the back just as he is about to slay the advocate, and then kills herself, leaving the Countess and Tolodano to marry and live as happily as the disturbed condition of the country will allow.

There is plenty of material in The Song of the Torch, but it needs revision by a practical dramatist to make it thoroughly effective. It was well acted at the King's, Hammersmith, Mr. Lawson Butt's Toledano being especially commendable. His performance was full of earnestness and vigour, and the nervous intensity displayed by Mr. Butt, both in the duel scene and throughout the piece, was very impressive. He was, personally, well suited to the part, of which he made the very most. Mr. A. E. Anson gave a picturesque performance as the stern, licentious Count, and his tall figure added to the effect of his embodiment. Mr. Hylton Allen did good work as Hartmann, and Mr. Cecil Brooking played Von Rosnitz carefully and capably. Mr. Robert Grey acted intelligently as Koppe, and Mr. Herbert Standing, jun., was an urbane, stately, and magnificent Heinrich. Miss Edith Olive was an expressive and commanding representative of the Countess, acting throughout with an elevation and repose which were very valuable, and being deep and strong in the emotional scenes. Miss Inez Bensusan put a vast amount of scornful audacity into Fernande, whom she made the typical bold, sarcastic adventuress; Miss Doris Digby gave a pleasing and careful performance as Madeline Rosenthal; and Miss Mary Allestree made the most of her opportunities as Mme. Favelle, the lady's indignant remonstrance in the third act being extremely well delivered. Miss Belle Travers did good work as Esther, and Miss Ruby Shawe was efficient as Annette. Smoothness of production was secured by Mr. Fewlass Llewellyn's careful superintendence; and "The song of the torch," a wild and spirited air, composed by Miss Elsie Hall, was well sung by the chorus. The incidents of the play were followed with much interest by an attentive and appreciative audience, and the author, who was called before the curtain, said a few words of thanks.

A CHAT WITH ROBERT BOLDER.

It is not often that an actor, after an absence from his native land for many years, comes home, with an established reputation, to the country where he had his training in the art which he practises; but this is the case with Mr. Robert Bolder, who has returned to us from South Africa, where he has made himself a name, and where he is a great popular favourite.

"I am an old Blue Coat School boy," says Mr. Bolder, "and made my first appearance at the Standard Theatre, in the part of the boy Bolder in Nicholas Nickleby, having thus conferred upon me my present nom de théâtre instead of my real name of Edney. After that I was at the Strand Theatre for three and a half years as call-boy and prompter, and left when the opera-bouffe season there opened with Madame Favart. I next went on tour with Strathmore and Paget's company, playing Percy Grafton, the ingenuous youth in Peril; and, soon after, joined the stock company at the Theatre Royal, Great Yarmouth, under Mr. Terry Hurst, in which Mr. Arthur Williams was the low comedian. Another of my 'stock' experiences was with Miss Lizzie King's company, in which I was second low comedian, on a tour round the South Coast. That our repertory was sufficiently extensive," says Mr. Bolder, "you may infer from the fact that I once played fifteen characters in one week.

MR. ROBERT BOLDER.

This is a little different from being engaged in a travelling company to 'found' a part on its original performance in London, and then sustaining it for six months in succession in the provinces. In those days, not only had we to be quick studies, but our memories had to be extremely tenacious. Later on, in 1880, I went on tour with an Edwin Drood company, playing the boy, Deputy; and I also enacted Hector Timid in the farce The Dead Shot. I toured with 'Dick' South's opera company, playing the Marquis Bambini in the Tambour Major.

"About this time the Julian Girard troupe of leg-mania artists—an off-shoot of the famous Girard troupe—added their performance to the attractions of The Tambour Major, and one evening the artist who enacted the female in the troupe being indisposed, I undertook his duties, with the result that I was engaged by the Julian Girards, with whom I appeared at the Oxford, the South London, the Aquarium, and other London halls. At Christmas, 1881, I was one of those who introduced æsthetic quadrilles, in which I took part in the Covent Garden pantomime. My next important engagement was at the Avenue, where Fred Leslie was then appearing in Manteaux Noirs. During the run of that piece I left England to go to the Cape in July, 1882."

During the six years or so which followed, Mr. Bolder was occupied in building up an enviable reputation in South Africa, appearing in a very large and varied range of parts. He is a practised comedian, both in the high and low departments of his art. To take at random a few of the rôles in which he has distinguished himself, we may mention Beau Farintosh in School, Dame Hatley in Black-Ey'd Susan (burlesque), Baron Stein in Diplomacy, Jim Swan in Black Sheep, Laurent in The Mascotte, Gaspard in Les Cloches de Corneville, Alessio in La Sonnambula, Squire Western in Sophia, Stephano in The Tempest (with Mr. William Haviland's company), the Rev. Robert Spalding in The Private Secretary, and Corkett in The Silver King. He played this part when he came home in 1890 on account of a family bereavement at the Pavilion Theatre, and tells an amusing anecdote of a contretemps that occurred on an occasion when he was acting Corkett at Cape Town.

"An amateur was playing Geoffrey Ware," says Mr. Bolder, "and when he was to be murdered he fell down, oblivious of the fact that the pistol of his supposed slayer had refused to explode. In order to cover the mishap, I introduced the impromptu line, 'He has killed him, and with his air-pistol!' The tension of the situation was so great that the mirth of the audience was not excited, but they showed by their applause that they appreciated my readiness."

Mr. Bolder is blessed with a clever wife and child. He espoused, en secondes noces, Miss Annie Edney, who excels in such parts as Mrs. Porter in Beauty and the Barge, Mrs. Putnam in The Freedom of Suzanne, Gretchen in Rip Van Winkle, Donna Lucia in Charley's Aunt, Belinda in Our Boys, May Edwards in The Ticket of Leave Man, Lady Jessica in The Liars, Mrs. Jarvis in The Lights of London, Ruth Rolt, Mrs. Gillfillian and Minnie Gillfillian in Sweet Lavender, the title part in Jane, Rosa Columbia in The Arabian Nights, Rebecca in Pink Dominos, Mrs. Rennick in The New Boy, Phœbe in As You Like It, the Queen in Hamlet, Siebel in Faust, and the title parts in Falka and Dorothy. His little daughter, Miss Sylvia Edney, is both pretty and talented. When only six years old she was selected from a number of other competitors to sustain the rôle of Derek Jesson in His House in Order at His Majesty's Theatre, Johannesburg, last year. Though evidently suffering from the "incubation" of some complaint, she played the part admirably, made a success in it, and only collapsed after the first night when it was discovered that she had been sickening for the measles! She is now completing her education, and preparing herself for the brilliant stage career that in all probability awaits her.

Mr. Bolder has not confined himself entirely to winning fame as an actor. He toured the Transvaal with a company of fourteen artists, and a repertory including Our Boys, The Arabian Nights, Pink Dominos, The Private Secretary, and Dandy Dick. He was also the pioneer of drama in Barberton, the Knysna Goldfields, and the Namaqualand Gold Fields. His popularity in South Africa is unbounded; he has had benefits and presentations galore, and the view taken by the South African public may be best summed up in the following statement of the Cape Town Argus: "Mr. Bolder, by repeated and increasing success in a round of comedy characters, has made for himself a name in South Africa which will long be remembered, and will not be without its value in any future career that may be in store for him." Mr. Bolder is about to put the truth of this prophecy to the test, having signed an agreement with Miss Olga Nethersole for America and the Continent. We wish this experienced and thoroughly-trained actor as much success in the States as he has won in the Colony—which is saying a great deal.

THE MOODY-MANNERS COMPANY.

On Monday, July 15, Nicolai's Opera
THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

Sir John Falstaff ..... MR. CHARLES MANNERS
Mr. Ford ..... MR. LEWYS JAMES
Mr. Page ..... MR. CHARLES MACGRATH
Fenton ..... MR. JOHN CHILD
Master Slender ..... MR. W. BAILEY
Dr. Caius ..... MR. CHAS. MOPPETT
Anne Page ..... MISS HILDA MOODY
Mistress Ford ..... MISS ENRIQUETA CRICHTON
Mistress Page ..... MISS ROSINA BEYNON

That grand opera in English is immensely popular in London was proved by the completely successful commencement of the Moody-Manners Company's season at the Lyric Theatre on Monday. The opening selection—Nicolai's Merry Wives of Windsor—was a very happy one. Otto Nicolai's opera, after having already enjoyed popularity on the Italian opera stage in England, was first given in English form by the late Carl Rosa, who produced it at Aberdeen in 1877. Mr. Henry Hersee, the adapter, substituted the text of Shakespeare for the feeble recitative with which the work had previously been supplied. Nicolai's opera was originally produced in Berlin in 1848, a year before the death of the composer, the libretto being "drawn" from Shakespeare's play by Mosenthal, the author of Leah. In a French version, which was produced at the Théâtre Lyrique on May 25, 1866, with the title Les Joyeuses Commères de Windsor, many unauthorised alterations were made in the score; and, by way of giving couleur locale to the Elizabethan drama, the curtain fell to the tune of "Rule, Britannia," sung by Mrs. Ford and the chorus! Mr. Hersee's version was ably and intelligently made. The cast of the performance by the Carl Rosa Company at the Adelphi Theatre, on Feb. 11, 1878, included Miss Julia Gaylord as Mrs. Ford, Miss Josephine Yorke as Mrs. Page, Mr. Snazelle as Mr. Page, Mr. J. W. Turner as Fenton, Mr. Charles Lyall as Slender, and Mr. Aynsley Cook as Falstaff. Mr. Charles Manners's reading of the last-named rôle is admirable in every way. His deep bass voice enables him to do full justice to the music, and the humour of his embodiment of the fat knight is irresistible, his drollery being of the best quality, and his comic acting and fine singing bringing down the house. The part of Mrs. Ford is played by Miss Crichton, who uses an excellent organ in effective and artistic style, and is expressive both in speech and gesture. Mr. Lewys James is a thoroughly capable exponent of the character of Ford, and plays the part with alert appreciation of its comicality. Warm praise is deserved by Mr. John Child's Fenton, a performance of real merit, his rendering of the serenade being thoroughly commendable; and Miss Hilda Moody as Sweet Anne Page presents a reading full of grace and charm, showing distinct musical ability. As Page Mr. Charles Macgrath is sound, careful, and satisfactory; and Miss Benyon plays Mrs. Page with due activity, energy, and emphasis. Mr. Bailey's Slender is replete with comic character; and Mr. Moppett makes a good deal of the absurdities of Caius. Particularly to be praised is the mounting, on which Mr. Manners has evidently bestowed great care and pains; and the efforts of the well-trained chorus add greatly to the success of the production. Herr Richard Eckhold conducts very skilfully. The opera had a very hearty reception, and the delight and satisfaction of the audience were unmistakable.

A large audience was present at the Lyric Theatre on Tuesday evening, to see Tannhäuser. Mme. Fanny Moody appeared as Elizabeth, and gave a broad and distinctive reading of the part; the invocation to the Hall of Song was one of Mme. Moody's vocal triumphs, while her intercession for Tannhäuser in the great finale of the second act revealed the emotional and dramatic singing and acting of a great artist. Mme Moody's beautiful voice was also heard to advantage in the devotional spirit which marked her singing of the Prayer. Mr. Joseph O'Mara sang the hero's music with fervour and expression, and his clever acting merits special commendation. Mr. O'Mara endeavours also to give some manly touches to Tannhäuser's weak and emotional character. A sympathetic Wolfram was found in Mr. William Dever, who also sang admirably the beautiful music allotted to this part, and Mr. Charles Magrath made a most dignified Landgrave. The Venus of Miss Toni Seiter proved artistic, both vocally and histrionically, and the smaller parts were filled by experienced artists. Herr Eckhold secured an excellent performance of the overture, and the chorus sang with a fine rich full tone. The scenes of the Hall of Song and the Venusberg were both new, and proved very picturesque and attractive.

Wednesday evening saw the presentation of Cavalleria Rusticana and I Pagliacci, works that have come to be associated, both in Italian and English performances. Pietro Mascagni since he wrote Cavalleria has not added to the brilliant reputation secured for him by the production of that opera, which gave him a meteoric fame as a composer in the 'nineties, and on which his reputation as a maestro still rests. The performance of both operas was under the direction of Signor Romualdo Sapio, who had to assent to an encore for the beautiful "Intermezzo," which revealed the excellent quality of the strings in his orchestra, who played con amore. Mme. De Vere-Sapio interested all by her fine impersonation of Santuzza, her acting having considerable dramatic significance, and her singing being characterised by faultless intonation and great charm. She received good support from Mr. Lewys James, a picturesque and vigorous Alfio; and Mr. John Child did justice to his music as Turiddu, though his acting lacked the passion incidental to a Southern temperament. Miss B. Alexander made effective use of her opportunities as Lucia, and Miss M. Wilcocks did well as Lola. The audience received the familiar work with enthusiasm. In I Pagliacci, Mr. William Dever as Tonio created an excellent impression by his singing of the famous prologue; and the part of Canio found excellent interpretation at the hands of Mr. Charles Carter, who played the part with considerable intelligence and no little sincerity. Miss Kate Anderson's style was somewhat cold as Nedda, but the performance did not lack charm or spirit. Messrs. V. Brodo and Frederic Erle played the small parts of Beppe and Silvio neatly. Signor Sapio again conducted, and secured an excellent interpretation of the music. The opera was well staged.

OLD FRENCH THEATRES.

We have seen, says Mr. Henry M. Trollope in his excellent "Life of Molière," that in the 17th century in France tennis-courts were often converted more or less temporarily into theatres. Such was the case with Molière's two first theatres in Paris; and the Théâtre du Marais had been originally a tennis-court. The Hôtel de Bourgogne had been built as a theatre in the middle of the 16th century, but nothing has been said to show that its shape inside was not like that of a tennis-court. The Palais Royal Theatre, where Molière played for twelve years, was the theatre in the Palais Cardinal which Richelieu had built for himself. The theatre stood in the right wing of the palace, close to the commencement of the present Rue de Valois, which begins at the Rue Saint Honoré, at one side of the Place du Palais Royal. And on the side of the building now known as the Conseil d'Etat, at the corner of the Rue de Valois, there is a marble tablet bearing the inscription:—"Ici s'élevait la salle de spectacle du Palais Cardinal, inaugurée en 1641, occupée par la troupe de Molière de 1661 à 1673, et par l'Académie Royale de Musique depuis 1673 jusqu'en 1763." Sauval, one of the chroniclers of the history of Paris, a contemporary of Molière though his book was not published until 1724, describes the theatre rather ambiguously, though he seems to say that it had undergone alteration. Inside, it was an oblong room with four walls at right angles. Sauval says that "it was not more than 9 fathoms (toises) wide, the space intended for the audience was 10 or 11 fathoms deep, and yet it contained as many as 4000 persons." This is clearly impossible. There were two rows of boxes, one above the other, until Easter 1671, when a third or top row was added. But the boxes on the side-walls were not rounded in front, and the occupants had to turn to the right or to the left to see the stage. Ladies who went to the play were seated there, and they enjoyed the comedy. A few seats for men, chiefly for the dandies, were placed on the stage. There was, of course, the parterre or the pit, and there was the amphitheatre. I think that the amphitheatre consisted of rows of raised seats behind the parterre and facing the stage. People there were far from the scene, but the places must have been considered good, for the prices charged for them were relatively high. An extract from Hubert's Register for the year 1672-73, giving the prices of places in the theatre, which I quote in the next paragraph but one, shows that on one occasion there were 394 tickets taken for the parterre and only 60 for the amphitheatre; on another day there were 514 persons in the parterre. Hubert had been a member of the troupe at the Palais Royal for some years, and must have known how the audience was placed. But a German professor, Herr Fritsche, who tried to throw light on Sauval's account of the interior of the Palais Royal Theatre, estimated that the parterre might hold 300 persons and the amphitheatre 700, I cannot but think that Herr Fritsche was mistaken. It is not likely that the parterre, the popular and the cheapest part of the house, should have been so much smaller than the amphitheatre. Sauval says that Richelieu's theatre was better than the others, in that the floor of the parterre sloped downward towards the stage.

The prices of the different places at the Palais Royal were: the parterre or pit, where no one was seated, cost 15 sous (there were 20 sous in the livre or franc, as it is now called); the third row of boxes, 1 livre; the second row of boxes, or "loges hautes," 1 livre 10 sous; the amphitheatre, 3 livres; the first row of boxes and the seats on the stage (called "le théâtre"), 5 livres 10 sous. In the 17th century "le théâtre" was held to mean that portion of the house devoted to the stage. The charges for all places in the theatre were high in comparison with those of our time, and sometimes the prices of most of the places were raised. This was called "jouer au double," or "à l'extraordinaire." The prices in the parterre, in the third and second row of boxes, were in fact doubled; they rose to 30 sous, 2 livres, and 3 livres respectively. A seat in the amphitheatre rose from 3 livres to 5 livres 10 sous. The first row of boxes and the seats on the stage remained unchanged at 5 livres 10 sous. Performances were given "au double" on one or more days when a new play by a known author was being acted and public curiosity was excited. But even with La Grange's Register before one, and comparing the receipts taken on the first five, ten, or twenty days on which any of Molière's comedies were performed, it would be very hazardous to try to determine when or for how long a play was acted "à l'extraordinaire" and the majority of the spectators were forced to pay double prices; and there must have been many persons who put off going to the theatre until the ordinary charges were made. The only time during Molière's lifetime that La Grange mentions this custom was on the occasion of the second performance of the Précieuses Ridicules, on the 2nd December, 1659. Chappuzeau leads one to think that it was quite possible that a play should be performed twenty times "au double." He says, "If a play has a great success, and is acted 'au double' twenty times consecutively, the author is made rich and the actors also." I cannot contradict Chappuzeau, but I fancy that the hypothetical event he mentions did not happen very often. It might have happened with the Tartuffe; and La Grange shows that the first seventeen performances, or thereabouts of the Ecole des Femmes, of the Critique de l'Ecole des Femmes, and of Psyché gave very high receipts.

When the Palais Royal theatre was quite full it might perhaps have held 1000 persons. At a performance of Psyché "à l'ordinaire," which gave a receipt of 1316 livres, there were 944 persons present; and of these 514 were in the parterre. From this perhaps it may be presumed that at the first performance of the Tartuffe "au double," which gave 2860 livres—the highest receipt at the Palais Royal—not many more persons were present than at the performance of Psyché just mentioned. Despois made an extract from Hubert's Register for 1672-3, which I will copy, as it shows how many persons were present at the first performance of the Malade Imaginaire, given "au double," and how they were placed:—

	Livres	Sous
Théâtre, 25 billets	137	10
Loges, Cinq (5 loges entières) et 59 billets	544	10
Amphithéâtre, 60 billets	330
Loges hautes, 81 billets	343
Loges de 3me rang, 23 billets	46
Parterre à 30 sous, 394 billets	591

Despois reckoned that there were eight persons in each of the five loges, besides the 59 billets de loge; so that at this performance there were 682 persons present. The receipt was very high, but the theatre was by no means full. It is at all events clear that the parterre was the popular part of the house, and that when the parterre was full no other part of the house contained so much money. Molière knew the meaning of his words when he said that he trusted to the judgment of the parterre.

The seats on the stage were chiefly frequented by the exquisites who liked to show themselves. At a time when rich men of fashion wore expensive Venice point-lace, they naturally wished to display it. But they might have done so without annoying both the actors and the audience by their folly. Molière gives two instances of this: in the first scene of the Fâcheux (verse 13 et seq.), and in the fifth scene of the Critique de l'Ecole des Femmes. As well as for men of fashion, there was a bench on the stage for poor authors, who entered gratuitously. Despois quotes a short passage from Scarron's dedicatory epistle to Dame Guillemette, written in 1648: "The Hôtel de Bourgogne is filled with authors even on the stage, because, like the page-boys, they pay nothing." And Boursault, in giving an account of the first performance (at which he was present) of Racine's Britannicus in 1669, speaks distinctly of an authors' bench. The seats upon the stage were not abolished in the Paris theatres until 1759.

AMERICAN STOCK COMPANIES.

The American provinces, wrote Mr. William Archer in a recent and most interesting article in the Tribune, stand to New York very much in the relation of the English provinces to London. New York is the chief producing centre, and the theatrical fare of other cities is supplied by travelling companies organised in New York, and sent out from New York by the firms of capitalists who control very nearly the whole theatrical "business" of the country. The strength of these "syndicates" (the two principal ones, by the way, have recently amalgamated) lies in the fact that the American provinces are proportionally more important than the English provinces. Many English managements can, and do, subsist upon London alone, making only occasional and unimportant excursions to the country. In New York York this is scarcely possible. It is "on the road" that the bulk of the profit upon any given production is to be made; consequently the combinations which control "out-of-town bookings" have the whip-hand of all "attractions" that are not strong enough, or, in other words, sufficiently indispensable, to make their own terms. But I will not attempt to enter upon the bewildering complexities of American theatrical organisation. The system is, doubtless, a rotten one, and hostile to sound theatrical art. The fact that theatrical art contrives to make notable headway in spite of it shows how strong the progressive impulse must be.

But while the leading theatres of the provincial centres are supplied by touring companies, at prices little, if at all, lower than those which obtain in New York, there exists in all the great American cities a very large (and very largely feminine) public which has an insatiable and indiscriminating appetite for theatrical entertainments at what are known as "popular" prices. They want to go often to the theatre—once a week at the very least. They would rather see four old plays at half a dollar apiece than one new play at two dollars. And this class of playgoers is somehow or other apt to be at leisure in the afternoon—not merely on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons, but every afternoon of the week. They are, I take it, the theatrical equivalent of the public which supports that strange and melancholy American institution, the "continuous vaudeville" show. The social significance of all this afternoon leisure is not for me to interpret. I simply record the plain fact that in all great American cites there are every day thousands of people seeking public entertainment of one sort or another from noontide onwards. To cater for this public, "Stock Company Theatres" have everywhere sprung up. The universal characteristic of these theatres is that they give two performances a day and change their bills every week. They deal largely, of course, in plays which have fallen into the public domain, and on which no royalties have to be paid; but they also present numerous copyright pieces After a play has enjoyed its first run of popularity in New York and "on the road," it is often advertised as "Freed for Stock," or, in other words, available for stock-company managers who choose to pay for it. The prices at these theatres, I imagine, never exceed one dollar. On a playbill before me the price of the first three rows of stalls is stated (I translate into English money) at four shillings for evening performances, three shillings for matinées; the bulk of the floor seats cost either two shillings or one shilling; the first balcony (dress circle) ranges downwards from two shillings at evening performances and eighteenpence at matinées; and every seat in the second balcony costs, at matinées, no more than sevenpence-halfpenny. These are the prices of the Castle Square Theatre, Boston, a very handsome, well-appointed house, larger and more comfortable than any of our suburban or provincial theatres with which I am acquainted. How faithful is the body of playgoers to whom this theatre appeals may be gathered from the following notices on the playbill:—

"Patrons by applying at the box-office may have the same seats reserved for them each week as long as they desire, on condition that the tickets are taken regularly one week in advance. Failure to do so simply cancels the privilege and incurs no liability whatever.

"Our regular patrons may subscribe for free seats for children between five and fifteen years for any matinée except Monday and Saturday, or when free list is suspended, and will be allowed one child's seat adjoining for each seat paid for."

There is no abonnement system at reduced rates, such as prevails at the German theatres; but this system of allowing a child's seat free to "regular patrons" comes to something nearly equivalent. I was told that many people availed themselves of the right to engage one particular seat throughout the season. Whether the "children free" privilege was found particularly attractive I omitted to ascertain.

What are we to say, now, as to the merits of this institution? At first sight it may seem almost to realise that dream of the theatrical reformer, a repertory theatre. But on looking a little more closely into it, we find that it has none of the advantages of a repertory theatre properly so-called. In the first place, it has not, in any true sense of the term, a repertory. When we speak of a repertory, we mean a number of plays always ready for performance with nothing more than a "run through" rehearsal, which, therefore, can be, and are, acted in such alternation that three, four, or five different plays may be given in the course of a week. New plays are from time to time added to the repertory, and those of them which succeed may be performed fifty, seventy, a hundred times, or even more, in the course of one season; but no play is ever performed more than two or three times in uninterrupted succession. At the Castle-square Theatre, on the other hand, and at the other stock-company theatres, each play is acted twelve times (occasionally, but rarely, twenty-four or even thirty-six times) in uninterrupted succession, and then drops out as completely as a play which has exhausted its popularity in a run of hundreds of nights. If it it put on again in a subsequent season, it has to be rehearsed afresh from beginning to end. Thus the institution is not a repertory theatre, but a short-run theatre—a totally different matter.

The Five Abadaroffs, in their funny prehistoric speciality, are booked to open at Toulon at the latter end of August, with a tour of the Continent to follow.

Mr. T. W. Ford, having concluded a special engagement with Mr. Walter Maclean, has been secured by Mr. Macdona for his autumn tour of Doctor Wake's Patient.

Mr. C. Emlyn Jones and the Daughters of Britain (prize singers in costume), have just completed a most successful engagement at the Winter Gardens, Blackpool. This was their second appearance there in eight weeks, owing to their enormous success. Next week they go to Morecambe, and return on Aug. 5 to the Metropolitan and Chelsea Palace, where their services have been secured by Mr. Henri Gros up to 1909.

DEATH OF FRED LOCKE.

It is with regret that we have to announce the death of Mr. Fred Locke, the well-known pantomime author and producer, who died at his residence, Dockhead-street, Saltcoats, N.B., on Sunday, 14th inst., after an illness which had lasted over eighteen months. Mr. Locke's full name was Fred John Locke Scobie, but years ago he took the necessary steps to legalise the name Fred Locke, under which he had made himself so well known in the theatrical world. Born in Glasgow fifty-five years ago, the deceased author was in earlier years a clerk in the Glasgow office of the big thread combine whose headquarters are in Paisley. His inclinations were always theatrical, and he was often assisting in the stage-managing of amateur productions and similar functions. For some time he was connected with the Globe Theatre in Tobago-street, Glasgow, when that east-end house was under the management of Mr. G. Goddard Wyatt, and the acting-manager was Mr. H. Cecil Beryl. A first-rate stock company was always a feature of this house, and Mr. Locke used to recall with pride that it was here he first met Mr. Wm. Mackintosh. A few years after (in 1879) Mr. Beryl became lessee of the Royal Princess's Theatre, Glasgow, and gave Mr. Locke his first commission as a pantomime writer. The result was a great success, and was the forerunner of that long line of hits at this same house, first under Mr. Beryl, and for the last twenty years under Mr. Rich. Waldon's able management

These pantomimes numbered twenty-six in all, which we feel certain is a record for consecutive productions by one author in one theatre, and the break only occurred last December, when the task had to be entrusted to another hand, Mr. Locke being at that time a helpless invalid, having been stricken by paralysis in January, 1906. In addition to his Princess's commissions, Mr. Locke had of course numerous others, and at Liverpool, Sheffield, Brighton, Huddersfield, and many other towns he achieved equally great success. At times he had as many as eight pantomime libretti placed at Christmas, and his total was well into hundreds, each of them showing him the possessor of a nimble wit and a caustic humour in handling the fads and foibles of the day. For the sake of his growing family, Mr. Locke left Glasgow a dozen years ago and went to reside at Johnstone, near Paisley. A few years after he again removed, this time to Saltcoats, where he had been for nine years.

He was a member of Ardrossan School Board, and took an active interest in Masonic affairs, being a member of Lodge Neptune, Kilwinning, at Saltcoats. He was greatly esteemed in the district, and his cheery presence will be missed by a large circle of friends. For several summers he published a small advertising sheet called the Pilot during the holiday season, and his humorous pars. in this made it an entertaining little paper. Mr. Locke leaves a widow and nine of a family, the youngest not yet two years old, and the sympathies of all professional friends will be extended to them in their affliction. In the latter part of 1906 an appeal was made in these columns on behalf of the family and very generously responded to, and in February of this year Mr. Rich. Waldon added to his previous kindnesses by giving his theatre and staff for a benefit matinée in aid of the fund. The financial result was that between the subscription and the benefit the sum of £230 was raised, and on this the family have been mainly dependent since Mr. Locke's illness commenced, he having been unable, during his more prosperous years, to provide for the inevitable rainy day. The funeral took place on Wednesday, and was carried through with Masonic honours, a large turnout of the brethren, in addition to many private friends and members of the general public, paying their tribute to the deceased author.

BARNARD'S PALACE, GREENWICH.

Mr. Bert Dent presents this week a most excellent bill for the amusement of his numerous patrons, who testify their appreciation of his efforts by greeting each turn with enthusiasm. Miss Jessie Maynard produces this week a clever sketch, entitled A Mad Actress. The scene is laid in a lunatic asylum, where an actress of considerable ability is under treatment as the result of a motor accident. During her isolation from the world, she relieves the monotony of her imprisonment by many elocutionary recitations, including the best known speeches of Ophelia, Juliet, and other famous female Shakespearian characters. In these Miss Maynard proves her ability as actress and elocutionist. Her enunciation is excellent, and her delivery of the speeches referred to brings down the house by its energy, expressiveness, and emphasis. She scores a decided success in the sketch, which is warmly received. Miss Ada Mayo does a capital turn, and her songs, entitled "Bass Drum" and "Fisherman and Mermaid," are loudly applauded; the Pritchards are applauded in their song, "Yellow Coons," and their dancing is exceptionally smart; W. Permaine's bears are wonderfully sagacious, and marvellously well trained; Ruffell's Bioscope presented a new series of amusing and interesting pictures; the two Erolls are very good indeed in their really funny patter and comedy speciality; the Benetti Troupe of Acrobats and Risley performers are very expert and clever; the Whitworth Cycling Girls and Gampkin Tramp cyclist present a clever and enjoyable turn; Tudor's ponies do some clever tricks with smartness and precision, and reflect great credit on their trainer; Charles Jackson's "Military song" and "Turn it up" are received with roars of laughter; Professor Colenzo, Continental illusionist, contributes a capital turn, which greatly interests all present; Miss Jeannie Deans is again appearing in "The Tinker's Weddin'"; Mrs. Clayton Bentley's company, including Miss Alice Spry, acts with success in The Terror of Tierney's Rents. The excellent band, under the capable direction of Mr. William Skerry, performs some very good selections.

BALHAM EMPIRE.

The patrons of the Balham Empire lack not for variety in the entertainment now being presented by the British Cinema Co., Ltd., the able manager of which is Mr. E. A. Dessent. There are two houses nightly, the first opening at half-past six and the second at nine o'clock. In the hour and a half history is made very rapidly, for important episodes in life stories are brought vividly before us. Of course, all this is done by means of the cinematograph and some very fine Pathé films. This week there are twelve of these stories. Two of the most interesting, from what might be called an educational point of view, are undoubtedly those dealing with an ostrich farm, and costumes of different centuries. The ostrich farm is at Nice, and we are shown some magnificent specimens of this genus of bird. We see them fed and plumed and otherwise dealt with. The eggs of the ostriches appear to be of an enormous size, even in the pictures, which are all remarkable for clearness and resemblance to actual life. "Harlequin's Story" is a clever trick film. Two figures, apparently made up to represent Harlequin and Columbine, have been standing on pedestals for a very long time, enjoying in silence each other's company. But Columbine is taken away, and Harlequin goes forth in pursuit. In this eminently chivalrous pursuit he is assisted by gnomes, who build bridges for him and in other ways render him service. The house whither the pretty doll-maiden has been taken is on fire, and the Harlequin, searching among the débris, discovers the separated limbs of his beloved, reverently places them in a bag, and subsequently, with the aid of a magic wand, puts them all together again. "Sambo as Footman" shows us a native of the Congo trying his 'prentice hand in quite a new rôle, with intensely laughable results for the spectators, but not for the black man's employers. Equally attractive are "The Electric Belt," "Modern Burglars," "The Corsican's Daughter," "Palmistry," and "Baby's First Outing." A particularly amusing film describes certain incidents in "Jim's Apprenticeships," the said Jim being an irrepressibly mischievous lad, who causes trouble in whatever trade he is placed. Of the same order is "Two Little Scamps" and "Troubles of a Cook." The entertainment comes to an end with a very beautiful transformation, very artistically coloured. A new set of films are to be shown to-night and forward, among the subjects being "Views of Paris," "Watch Dogs," "Knowing Dogs," "Living Silhouettes," "Journey Round a Star," "Smoking Chimney," "Mephisto's Son," "Joys of Tight Boots," "A Slave's Love," "Views of Niagara," "A Nervous Kitchenmaid," "Blind Beggar's Dog," "The Boar Hunt," "Misadventures of a Negro King," and "The 'Cello Player."

The Terriers would like to meet any team attached to the music-hall or theatrical profession on the second or third Wednesday in August. For other open dates address the hon secretary, Ben Woodger, Metropole Hotel, Camberwell, S.E.

Performers with acts suitable to the Continent that are thinking of going abroad cannot do better than write to Mr. G. W. Gerald, 39, Avenue des Ternes, Paris, who can fix them up for a good long tour. He has had twenty-seven years' experience, so knows the wants and requirements of English artists.

The Seldoms, in their exhibition of living statuary, will terminate their long engagement (240 performances) at the London Pavilion on Saturday evening next, when a signed souvenir portrait of Mlle. Olga Seldom will be presented to every member of the audience.

Mr. Reuben Morr's latest concert party, "The Artists," are proving a big success on Bournemouth Pier this month During August and September they return to the Pier, Cowes.

After the next two weeks of his engagement at the Tivoli, Fragson will not be giving his entertainment in London until he opens in Mr. Arthur Collins's annual at Old Drury on Boxing Night.

Among the latest engagements for the Drury Lane pantomime is the clever Pender Troupe, who will be responsible for the harlequinade, and will introduce an animal act and some quaint stilt dancing.

Mr. Frank E. Burdett is moving with the times. Following on recent reports of the unrest in India, he is now producing the military sketch, Mutiny, an episode from the Indian Campaign of 1857. The first representation of this sketch in town will take place at the Queen's, Poplar, on Monday.

In Memoriam.

In affectionate and loving memory of Marie Henry Walford (Mystic Marie), who died July 19, 1906, aged 21.

MISS MARIE WALFORD.

'Tis just a year ago to-day our hearts were sore with grief.
Our darling Marie breathed her last—in death she found relief.
She was so patient all along, and never did complain;
She always had a loving smile, tho' she was racked with pain.

We all do miss her angel face, so bright and always gay—
A light has now gone from our home which none on earth could stay.
Such wondrous gifts and talents rare were very seldom seen,
And thousands flocked where'er she went to see this Earthly Queen.

But now, alas! she's gone aloft. The curtain has rung down
She has gone now to a better world, with angels she shall reign.

Her memory shall be ever green, love's ties for ever blest.
My thoughts, year out, my thoughts, year in, shall be with her for aye.

Tho' deep seas may divide us, wherever I may roam,
My thoughts shall always be with you, my northern Highland home;
For there rests one we dearly loved, from sorrow, grief, and pain,
And when my task on earth is done her I shall meet again.

The storms on Macduff's shores may rage, and waves with thunderous roar
May dash upon the rocks at night, and make my heart feel sore;
But all the noise or lightning's flash shall not disturb her sleep:

Walford Bodie, M.D.
The Manor House, Macduff, N.B.

A 44-h.p. Mercedes car, driven by Mr. Levy, of Hampstead, was descending the steep hill known as Grove-lane on Thursday, and was about to turn the sharp corner into Champion Park when the tyre came off one of the front wheels. This upset the steering, with the result that the car crashed into the iron railings guarding the railway, broke through, and fell some 20ft. down the bank. Mr. Claude Levy, Mr. Stanley Vivian, and Mr. Cecil de Lee, who accompanied him, were thrown headlong over the fence, but fortunately escaped serious injury. They had a really marvellous escape from death, as the railway at this point is some 50ft. below the level of the roadway.

The following extract from Mr. Albert Strong's work on the "Law of Copyright" may help you:—"There is copyright in an author's play for forty-two years from the first publication, or for the term of his life and seven years from his death, whichever term shall be the longer. The same times apply to the performing right, beginning from the first representation, even though the play be not printed." The copyright term, therefore, seems to be at an end.*

"DOLLY'S BIRTHDAY."

Edwin Stacy .....MR. ALFRED IBBERSON
His Wife .....MISS DORA GREGORY
Dolly Stacy .....MISS ELSIE FOSTER

Dolly's Birthday is decidedly pretty and interesting; but the story has served as the theme of many plays. Mrs. Stacy, on her daughter Dolly's tenth birthday, receives a letter from her ne'er-do-well brother John full of endearments. This she carelessly leaves lying on the table. It is read by her husband, who accuses her of having a lover. Being bound to secrecy, she cannot explain, and her husband tells her "to leave the house." She goes, and Dolly comes in with a merry troupe of her playmates to join her in her birthday feast. The father is miserable, and when Dolly asks for her mamma, he tells her to take her companions, go in search of her mother, and bring her back to him. This she soon accomplishes, and is equally successful in reconciling her father and mother. Miss Elsie Foster assumes the title-rôle with girlish grace and charm, and gives a fresh, bright, and clever impersonation, her versatility being displayed in her pretty "Dolly" song and dance. Mr. Alfred Ibberson as the father and Miss Dora Gregory as the mother, with a troupe of juveniles, aid the success.

THE secretary of the Music Hall Benevolent Fund has received the sum of £7 10s. from "Griff," being part proceeds of concerts organised on board the steamships Kenilworth Castle and Norman. The committee are very grateful to this gentleman and also to Geo. Manton, Charles Stevens, Fred Meaton, Arthur Rockhill, Jock Bell, Harry Tate's company, the Three Braggs, and Miss Winifred Hare. The secretary has also received from Mr. William Payne the sum of £3 5s. 9d., being the amount collected in the South London Palace Pence Box. Thanks are also due to this gentleman.

GRANVILLE, WALHAM GREEN.

At the Granville this week Mr. William H. Lennon presents a strong and varied programme, with dainty Daisy Dormer as the bright particular star. "I want a girl" and "I'm agoin', I'm agoin', I'm gone," are a couple of ditties which show her at her best, and the dance which follows is graceful, even in its abandonment. "The Enchanted Iona," a new and up-to-date comedy illusion, by the well-known comedian, Charley Frazer, is one long laugh, combined with wonderment and amazement. A statue of a female is left in charge of a raw youth, who, directly he is left to his own devices, is alternately startled by an apparition of Lucifer drinking fire out of a golden goblet, pleased by a little loving Dutch girl, and flabbergasted by a phantasy à la Ophelia, and in the end the statue vanishes, only to reappear as the callow youth bounds in from the back of the auditorium. The Four Athos are a troupe of marvellous original ball manipulators and head-balancing acrobats, who give a particularly neat and dexterous exhibition of juggling and balancing feats. Alma Obrey, the Australian representative character comedienne, creates a very pleasing impression in her songs, "On your own, my boys," and "What is the use of a penny?" in which she persuades the audience to join in swelling the chorus by a most humorous and tricky method of cajolery. Jennie Johns is a charming soubrette with a strong sense of character and a clever way of singing a catchy song. Her contributions consist of "The seaside girl" and "Bertie, the volunteer," both of which items are wonderfully well received. Syd May, the imitator without imitators, gains much applause by his masterly imitation of Gus Elen in "Waiting for work," Tom Costello in "What's the good of a ten-pound note?" Harry Lauder in "I love a lassie," and in his realistic burlesque sketch of Hackenschmidt wrestling. Gus Hindell, comedian, is a prime favourite in his "Critics of the picture of Venus" and "A charity entertainment." Frank Halter and Marie Ray, in a Hebrew character comedy, with a dancing soubrette, cause much amusement. The New Macs, the Sisters Wickenden, Will Cromwell, comedian, and Mr. and Mrs. Harold Finden, in their screaming farcical sketch, Settled Out of Court, as well as Johnson and Bert, in their novel act, A Queer Custom, provide capital entertainment. Vernon's Bioscope, with "The Winking Woman," "The Fatal Sneeze," and "Late for Lunch," once more form a veritable mine of mirth-moving possibilities.

THE Terriers Association, on Wednesday, defeated Crouch End Empire by six wickets at Champion Hill Grounds, after a very exciting game. The Crouch End Empire won the toss and batted first. Harris and Johnson made a brilliant stand before they were parted, the first wicket falling at 118. The next five batsmen played well, and took the score up to 192, when Crouch End declared. The Terriers opened the innings with Clements and Stebbings, having only ninety minutes in which to score the necessary runs, almost an impossibility. The first four wickets fell for 96 runs. At 4.25 67 runs were required to win, and by a fine display of batting these were obtained in twenty-five minutes. In the last ten minutes 43 runs were recorded, leaving the Terriers victors. Garbett and Stebbings must be congratulated on their fine display.

THE ERA ANNUAL, 1907.
"The Era" Annual for the current year, besides having all the usual valuable features which make the work so necessary for reference, has, for a special feature, a series of short articles, stories, or sketches by prominent members of the dramatic and musical profession, a well-executed portrait of each writer accompanying the text. The obituary for last year—unfortunately a heavy one—is given in a series of photograph likenesses of those departed. The full-page portrait of Mr. J. L. Toole is, indeed, worth more than the humble shilling at which the Annual is sold. The monthly calendar is, as usual, a storehouse of interesting facts connected with the stage.—Weekly Times and Echo.

THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT FOR ACTOR AND COMPOSER,
BY
ALBERT A. STRONG, LL.B. (Lond.).
Mr. A. A. Strong has published a book on "The Law of Copyright for Actor and Composer," which should be in the hands of everyone who is obliged to know about this perplexing subject. Dramatic copyright in England is in a particularly unsatisfactory state, and it is much to be hoped that ere long some more rational method of securing protection for a play may be devised than the slovenly and sometimes costly "production for copyright purposes," which is at present required.—St. James's Gazette.

THE ERA

SHAW AT THE SAVOY.

The experiment which is soon to be tried by Messrs. VEDRENNE and BARKER of a season of Mr. BERNARD SHAW'S works at the Savoy is decidedly an interesting one. Mr. SHAW is a phenomenon; and there is inexhaustible amusement in watching the development and cessation of phenomena. The line that we have always taken with regard to eccentric plays, and the various proposals for endowed theatres for their production, is that the machinery already at the disposal of the eccentric dramatist is quite sufficient to test the taste of the public. Our contention has been fully justified by practice. Not only has it been found possible, without State or charitable aid, to run a theatre on eccentric lines; there are, in addition, several private associations formed for the same purpose, and now, at any rate, solvent and in active existence. Our idea always has been that if people really want a thing they ought to be willing to pay for it; and the result has shown that they are.

It must not be too hastily inferred, however, that the continuation of Messrs. VEDRENNE and BARKER'S management at the Court Theatre was a symptom of any extraordinary intellectual advance in the British playgoer. In the first place, we must remember that those gentlemen, as soon as they had secured the services of Mr. SHAW, had no need of any other extensive advertisement. We have no doubt that they deal very liberally with "G. B. S."; and he deserves to be treated by them right royally. He has practised the art of self-advertisement so ably, he has been so successful in achieving notoriety, that he is a daily full-page "ad." in himself. For one member of the public that goes to see a play by SHAW—he has attained the honour of the omitted front-name from purely intellectual and artistic motives—twenty are led by the motive of simple curiosity. Mr. SHAW, who is frankness itself in his demonstration of his methods, has fully explained them in his prefaces. In the chapter "On Diablonian Ethics" he says: "The stage tricks of the Devil's Disciple are not the forgotten ones of the sixties, but the hackneyed ones of our own time. Why, then, were they not recognised? Partly, no doubt, because of my trumpet and cartwheel declamation. The critics were the victims of a long course of hypnotic suggestion by which 'G. B. S.,' the journalist, manufactured an unconventional reputation for BERNARD SHAW the author. I have advertised myself so well that I find myself, whilst still in the middle life, almost as legendary a person as the Flying Dutchman. Critics, like other people, see what they look for, not what is actually before them. In my plays they look for my legendary qualities, and find originality and brilliancy in my most hackneyed clap-traps. Were I to republish BUCKSTONE'S Wreck Ashore as my latest comedy it would be hailed as a masterpiece of perverse paradox and scintillating satire."

How true all this is! But in one particular Mr. SHAW does not do himself sufficient justice. Now that Mr. GILBERT has retired from business, Mr. SHAW is almost the only dramatic humourist in England. Comedy, the comedy of character, is almost extinct amongst us. The successful plays are either dramas or farces. Our contempt for Mr. SHAW'S pretentions to philosophy is only equalled by our admiration of his gifts of humour and observation. Mr. SHAW'S cleverness, as he explains, consists in "gammoning" the public that there are deep and subtle theories and ideas at the back of his plays. This irritates those who see through the trick so much that they often appear unable to do the ingenious self-advertiser justice. But the average man is delighted, when he enters, as he fancies, the area of advanced thought, to find, somewhat as Mr. Jenkins did in Two Roses when he went into "serious" circles, that there was more fun in them than any one would think. Take Man and Superman, for instance. The motive is that of Bunsby and Mrs. MacStinger; of the elder Weller and the "widder." But by misrepresenting the theories of one NIETZSCHE—a writer on philosophy, half-genius, half-lunatic, who died in the madhouse—Mr. SHAW has managed to spread a halo of intellectuality, originality—whatever one cares to call it—around the play. This "dodge," in combination with the real merit of the comedy, proves irresistible. The object of comedy is to reflect contemporary manners. Well, here were two "up-to-date" characteristics going a-begging—the School Board educated, high-class mechanic, and the chauffeur. Mr. SHAW has eyes to see, and a comedy sense wherewith to appreciate—he utilises the material with delicious results. And what more genuine in the way of a comedy situation can there be when the hair-brained free-love theorist, John Tanner, condoling with and encouraging the young woman who, he believes, has "thrown her petticoat over the windmills," has his sympathy thrown back in his face by the lady, who is really, though secretly, a most respectable married woman? As for the whole business of Tanner's pursuit and capture by Anne, it is comedy of the purest kind.

But why call the play Man and Superman? What have the transmogrified Bunsby and his pursuer to do with NIETZSCHE'S crazy pessimism? Why not run the amusing piece on its merits? Simply because nowadays people will not come into a show to see comedy unless the big drum be well beaten outside. Had Mr. SHAW entitled his work The Trapping of Tanner, left out the sham philosophy, and omitted his own name from the programme, it is doubtful if, with all its merits, the piece would have done any better than The Silver Box and other equally clever and more consistent Court productions.

The promised production of Cæsar and Cleopatra at the Savoy will put our—and Mr. SHAW'S—theory to the test. Here it has been impossible to "work" the philosophical and advanced-thought trick. There is an attempt, and no more, to drag in an attack on death sentences and the legal punishment of crime; but the play, as a whole, is a delightfully imaginative and well-prepared comedy-drama of 48 B.C. It is true that there is something of the réclame in Mr. SHAW'S audacious but absurd abuse of SHAKESPEARE'S Cæsar and applause of his own; and perhaps if he were to make a speech to the same effect every evening before the performance of the play his monologue might prove a "draw." But this is the Nemesis of charlatanism: that, when you have gained a reputation partly by genius and partly by humbug, when you leave out the humbug you may not get even credit for the genius. For, in the end, everything finds its level, and every dog has his day. Whether Mr. SHAW'S is nearly over, or whether he has only just entered on a new lease of notoriety—and consequent success—will be proved, to a certain extent, by the failure or success of Messrs. VEDRENNE and BARKER'S season at the Savoy.

WALTHAMSTOW PALACE.

A programme well equipped with the good things of amusement life is being presented this week at the house presided over by Mr. Arthur J. Barclay, and universal satisfaction may be accepted as a foregone conclusion. The ball is started rolling by Miss May Marton, who sings "You, you, you!" with great effect; Mr. Walter Emerson is a clever comedian whose singing of "Another one" is only beaten in excellence by his neat and dexterous dancing; the Merry Monopedes (Conway and Leland) immediately make themselves popular favourites, their performance being loudly and deservedly applauded; a great hit is made by Mr. Harry Carsdale, whose mimicry of various animals is simply extraordinary, that of the familiar barndoor fowl being particularly clever; the modern Hercules, John Grun Marx, arouses something like enthusiasm by his feats of strength, which have the additional merit of being graceful, to which the grand physique of the man himself lends itself effectively; if we must have "strong men" on the stage, by all means let us have them handsome as well. Miss May Belfort is a charming comedienne, who succeeded in securing the good graces of the house on her first appearance. A vocalist and dancer who has, on one previous occasion at least, made herself popular at the Palace, is Miss Gwennie Hasto. This week the fascinating lady sings her sweetest, but certainly eclipses her vocal success by the admirable grace of her dancing, which recalls the triumphs of the late Miss Kate Vaughan in her best—i.e., Gaiety—days. It is an absolute delight to watch the dainty footing and the marvellous manipulation of the voluminous skirts. Burke, Andrus, and Frisco appear in a spectacular absurdity, entitled London to Madrid, a highly amusing piece of nonsense well worked up. The substantial, not to say heavy, item of the programme is supplied by Percy Murray and company in a Peruvian sketch, The One Too Many. There is a note of sadness pervading the little play which appeals strongly to the better instincts of even the most casual critic whose critical faculties are not "too many" for him. Mr. Percy Murray himself plays Beppo Sancho with picturesque effect; Mr. James Webster gives a good account of the Peruvian officer, Rio Martinio; Miss Madge Robson is a fine Suzanni; Miss Scard Butler a good Marda Sancho; and Miss Lena Penrose a perfect Ziska. Ruffell's Imperial Bioscope continue to be about the most popular feature of Mr. Barclay's bill.

MR. GRAHAM MORRISON has been engaged by Mr. Edward Compton as acting-manager and secretary for his season at the St. James's Theatre.

THE DRAMA IN PARIS.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

PARIS, THURSDAY, JULY 18.—The Gymnase has closed its doors. Mademoiselle Ma Femme had 280 performances. Mme. Marthe Regnier, who created the rôle of Josette, having started for the seaside a few days ago, her place was taken by Mlle. Roger, the daughter of the late Victor Roger, the composer of Les Twenty-eight Jours de Clairette. It was a difficult undertaking, but the young artist threw herself well into the work, and displayed brilliant qualities that augur well for her future career.

As usual at this time of the year, M. Jules Claretie and the members of the Comédie-Française committee have gone through the farce of giving an audition to the candidates who seek an engagement at that theatre. This painful ceremony has already been described in these columns, and unfortunately it never varies. The candidates know—or ought to know—that they have not the slightest chance. Every year the house of Molière is compelled to admit a few of the first prizes at the Conservatoire competition, so that there is never any vacancy; and this time M. Claretie has engaged M. de Feraudy (son of the famous actor) and Mlle. Lifraud, two laureates. For all that, twenty-six postulants had entered their names, but at the last moment six thought better of it, and only twenty put in an appearance. Poor twenty! One after another they came forward and recited their tirade in a trembling voice, awed by the darkness of the hall, by the ghostly-looking coverings of the seats, by the silence, only broken by one of the sociétaires occasionally blowing his nose. The next morning each of the "twenty" received a short note beginning with "We regret to inform you——." It would not be surprising if all the letters of regret were written in advance.

AT the Comédie-Française MM. Victor and Paul Margueritte have read to the artists, who will have to interpret it, their play, L'Autre. The cast will comprise MM. Grand, Siblot, Paul Numa, Mlles. Du Minil, Cerny, Géniat, and Robinne.

WE are all sorry to hear that M. Prud'hon, the well-known actor, has met with an accident. Getting down from an autobus in the Avenue de l'Opéra, the vehicle started off too soon, and M. Prud'hon was thrown down so violently that he fractured his wrist. He intended leaving Paris that same night on a month's holiday.

Two prize winners at the Conservatoire have also been engaged at the Opéra. They are Mlle. Lapeyrette and M. Duclos. MM. Messager and Broussan have informed them that their engagement will hold good with the new management.

A SO-CALLED well-informed paper made the absurd announcement that M. Gailhard intended putting four new works into rehearsal between now and the end of the year. Considering that M. Gailhard will leave the Opéra on Dec. 31 prox., it stands to reason that he will not indulge in such a freak. The only work now in rehearsal is Le Lac des Aulnes, by M. Henri Maréchal, to be brought out in October. M. Gailhard will not even produce La Forêt, a lyric drama by M. Savard, to a poem by M. Laurent Tailhade. The composer not having quite finished his score, M. Gailhard told him that he must arrange matters with MM. Messager and Broussan. Among the works accepted by the latter is La Fête chez Thérèse, by M. Catulle Mendès, set to music by M. Reynaldo Hahn.

IN the theatrical world most marriages take place during the holidays. July is pairing-time for the overworked artist. This week we had several. Mlle. Rachel de Ruy, the well-known singer, was married to M. Pierre Létorey, the composer; M. Steck, the distinguished chef d'orchestre, became the husband of Mlle. Marguerite Monnet; and Mlle. Dette, of music hall renown, has become Mme. Schmidt. There are plenty more to follow.

THE members of the showmen world here have reason to be proud. A few days ago a woman owning a waxwork show was arraigned before one of our police courts for assaulting her mother-in-law. The case was not a particularly nice one, and the prosecuting counsel began his speech by referring to the "immorality" in that profession, when the presiding magistrate stopped him. "I cannot allow you," he said, "to make such a sweeping assertion. In the course of my career I have found better morals with people in the showmen world than elsewhere. In fact, I can hold them up as an example to others!" The magistrate's words were received with applause.

ANOTHER music hall singer has gone over to the "regular" stage. He is M. Girier, and has been engaged by M. Michaud to make his début at the Nouveautés in M. Tristan Bernard's new farce.

"LE PUITS NUMERO 4" is the title of a sensational piece by MM. Augustin Thiérry and Eugène Bertaux, to be brought out at the Grand Guignol next season. I have been assured that it will give the "shivers" to the most callous person, and such a statement from a member of the Grand Guignol, which has the speciality of "horrors," means a lot.

M. FRANCIS ROBIN, the new manager of the Capucines, rubs his hands with delight. Speculating on cold weather, he has kept his little house open, and it is full every night. He now wishes it were twice the size.

I HAVE to record the death of M. Alphonse Lemonnier, dramatist. His father, mother, aunts, and uncles were all in the "profession." It, therefore, was not surprising that Lemonnier, already at the age of seventeen, should have wanted to mount the boards. But as his success as an actor was not great he took to writing, and things went much better. With William Busnach, Beauvallet, Eugène, Déjazet, Monselet, Péricaud, and other well-known playwrights he produced several pieces, some of which, like Madame la Maréchale, had a good run. He also became manager of the Château-d'Eau, which he re-christened Le Théâtre de la République. It was then that he committed the great mistake of his life. He joined the staff of an important morning paper, and wrote a series of articles, wherein he "slated" those connected with the theatrical world. To everyone's surprise, he was especially hard on actors and actresses. He who, in the course of a long and chequered career, knew of the hardships of an artist's life, attacked the members of the profession with a virulence that took people by surprise. Finally, a journalist took M. Lemonnier to task in a manner that led to an action for libel. Soon afterwards M. Lemonnier left Paris for Brussels, where he managed the Alhambra. His wife, Mme. Riquet-Lemonnier, is very talented, and was a favourite with the Paris public.

M. POREL, who has just gone into partnership with M. Carin, informs us that the Vaudeville will re-open on Sept. 1 with Le Ruisseau, to be followed by a revival of L'Education d'un Prince, with, of course, Mme. Granier in the principle rôle. The first novelty will be Patachon, a comedy in four acts, by MM. Duquesnel and Hennequin. The former, one of our veteran critics, was formerly manager of the Odéon. Mme. Marthe Regnier, Mlle. Rosa Bruck, M. Noblet, and M. Levesque have been specially retained to interpret the work, which, we are assured, will be one of the "hits" of the season.

M. GABRIEL FAURE'S Pénélope will be produced at the Opéra in the course of next year. The libretto is by M. Réné Fauchois.

THE famous composer, Verdi, in his will, requested that a cabinet full of papers should be destroyed, but the request was not complied with, and it is in this cabinet that the score of a new opera has been found. It appears to be an early work. Musical circles are greatly interested by the report of the discovery.

ROYAL OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

The first production of Alfredo Catalani's Loreley was given at Covent Garden on Friday night, July 12, with a fairly strong cast. Catalani, who is little known in this country, died in 1893, before reaching the age of forty, and his opera heard on Friday was produced with some success in 1890. The libretto of the opera, which is founded on the Lurline legend, is by Messrs. Carlo D'Ormeville and A. Zanardini, and the story relates how Loreley, a country girl, in love with Walter, Lord of Oberwesel, revenges herself on the young lord, who is about to marry Anna, daughter of the Margrave, by invoking the aid of our familiar friend, Alberich, King of the Rhine, offering to become his wife if he will endow her with surpassing beauty, and at the wedding between Walter and Anna, Loreley appears, and by her beauty casts a spell over her former lover. Shortly after the interrupted wedding, Anna dies, and Walter, hearing of this event, faints beside the river. On recovering, he again finds Loreley beside him, and they embrace; but the Rhine King naturally objects, and on the departure for ever of Loreley, Walter in despair drown himself in the river. That such a story is capable of musical treatment is evident, and the composer, an experienced musician, writes with considerable earnestness. Still, the absence of a strong human interest is greatly felt. Unlike the modern Italian composers, Catalani seems to have founded his music on the German ideals, and has evidently been greatly influenced by the earlier operas of Wagner. There are some pleasing melodies in Loreley, chief among them being Anna's aria, "Amore celeste," while there are some attractive choruses and processional music, with a pretty ballet, cleverly arranged by M. F. Ambrosiney; but the music allotted to Walter, although impassioned, fails to be convincing, or to entirely realise the more dramatic situations, and the scoring for the orchestra is in many instances weak. In Loreley's part there are some effective melodies, and, in spite of an apology on behalf of Mlle. Scalar because of a cold, she sang most successfully; and the small character of Anna was admirably sung by Mlle. Selma Kurz. Signor Bassi gave a fervent rendering of the hero's music; while ample justice was done to the parts of Rudolph and Hermann by M. Journet and Signor Sammarco. The opera was well mounted, and skilfully conducted by Signor Campanini, and an excellent English version written by Mr. Alfred Kalisch.

Last Saturday night there was a repetition of Verdi's Rigoletto, with the welcome reappearance of Signor Bonci as the Duke. Signor Bonci was well received, sang with great fervour, and was encored in "La donna è mobile"; while Mme. Melba sang "Caro nome" beautifully; and that fine artist, Signor Sammarco, acted and sang the Jester's part superbly. An English artist, Mme. Edna Thornton, appeared with success as Maddalena. Signor Panizza conducted.

Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor, after a lapse of some years, was performed at Covent Garden on Wednesday evening in the presence of a large and enthusiastic audience, no doubt largely owing to the presence of Mme. Melba in the cast in her familiar rôle of Lucia. Although the great prima donna at first showed evidence of a cold, the effects of this rapidly wore off during the evening, and the unrivalled vocalist gave so perfect a rendering of the great Mad Scene that a perfect storm of applause from all parts of the house proved her undoubted triumph. While we have such consummate exponents of florid music as Mme. Melba and Signor Caruso with us, many of the old and once popular operas of Bellini, Rossini, and Donizetti might with advantage be revived. Mme. Melba received excellent support from the Edgardo of Signor Bonci, who by his fine singing and acting greatly advanced his position in the esteem of the audience. That clever artist Signor Scotti proved an able exponent of Enrico Ashton; while M. Journet made Raimondo duly important. The other characters of Alice, Arturo, and Normando were adequately filled by Mme. Severina, Signor Venturini, and Signor Zucchi, and excellent orchestral results were secured by the conductor, Signor Panizza.

MR. GEORGE ALEXANDER'S COURSE.

MR. GEORGE ALEXANDER, at the conclusion of the performance of John Glayde's Honour at the St. James's Theatre on the 12th inst., said: "To-night I close my longest and most successful season in this theatre. I have had the privilege of producing a comedy by Mr. Arthur W. Pinero, to whom I owe many debts of gratitude, and the play you have seen to-night by Mr. Alfred Sutro, to whom I also tender sincere thanks. I have committed the grave indiscretion of running these two plays for a period of eighteen months. I use the word 'indiscretion,' for have we not been very recently told by an expert that the decline of the English drama (we have heard of this decadence from the year 1) is due to two causes—the actor-manager and the long run? As you will have seen from the performance to-night, I have taken care to surround myself with the most incompetent actors and actresses money can buy. I have to thank my friend, Miss Eva Moore, and all the other members of my company for so kindly obscuring their talents under this roof, and for being willing instruments in helping me to bask in the limelight of vanity and egotism—(laughter)—and Mr. Michael Sherbrooke will understand that the coolness existing between us is only due to the fact that he has made so palpable a hit in the play you have witnessed this evening. The worst of it all is, ladies and gentlemen, I intend to continue to pursue my downward course—to produce the best plays I can secure, and to allow them to run as long as you will pay to see them. After a brief holiday I shall visit my provincial friends with His House in Order, but I shall return to this theatre early in November to produce an adaptation, by Mr. Cosmo Gordon Lennox, of Le Voleur, called The Thief, in which, I am glad to say, Miss Irene Vanbrugh will act with me. This, in turn, will be followed by the production of a new play from the pen of Mr. Pinero, and a revival of The Prisoner of Zenda. In my absence the theatre will be occupied by Mr. Edward Compton, who, fresh from his triumphs in the provinces, will appear in a new play, entitled The Eighteenth Century, and I only hope my own good luck will follow him."

ON Friday next (instead of usual Wednesday match) July 26, the Hercules team, captained by Willson, will play the Terriers at Sam Salter's Ground, commencing 12 noon.

LE MARIN, the wrestler, after doing his turn at the Empire, Dublin, on Saturday night, appeared in a private box in the Theatre Royal, in company with a wrestler named Allan. Hackenschmidt had already performed. Towards the close of the performance Allan stood up and announced, amid a scene of considerable excitement and commotion, that Le Marin was there to deliver his challenge to Hackenschmidt in person. Le Marin then stepped forward, and, dramatically taking off his overcoat, revealed himself in wrestling costume. The lights were turned down at this stage for the cinematograph performance, and Le Marin and his friends quietly departed.

"THE CORSICAN BROTHERS."

The source of The Corsican Brothers, says the writer of an exhaustive article in the Liverpool Courier, is a narrative by the elder Dumas (1803-1870), which is to be found in his "Impressions de Voyages." It attracted the attention of the dramatists Grange and Xavier de Montepin, who founded upon it the play Les Frères Corses, which was first performed at the Théâtre Historique, Paris, on Aug. 10, 1850, Charles Fechter appearing in the title-rôles. Eighteen months later the first of many adaptations, and that which may be described as the standard English adaptation, was produced at the Princess's Theatre, London. The precise date was Feb. 24, 1852, the adaptor being Dion Boucicault (1822-1890), whilst the production was by Charles Kean, who played the twins, Alfred Wigan being the Chateau-Renaud, J. Vining the de Montgiron, Miss Murray the Emilie, Miss Carlotta Leclercq the Coralie, and Miss Vivash the Estelle. Boucicault had many emulators—in fact, a deluge of adaptations followed upon the Kean production, and hereon we cannot do better than quote Mr. Davenport Adams. He says in his remarkable "Dictionary of the Drama": "Another version was played for the first time at the Marylebone Theatre, London, on March 8, 1852. This was followed a week later by two more versions, viz., The Corsican Brothers, translated by G. A. Sala and performed at the Surrey Theatre with W. Creswick as the Brothers, T. Mead as Chateau-Renaud, Widdicomb as Colonna, &c.; and The Corsican Brothers, by G. Almar, produced at the Victoria Theatre, London, with J. T. Johnson as the Brothers, Ramong as Chateau-Renaud, T. H. Higgle as Montgiron. Two more versions were performed on March 22—one at the Queen's Theatre, and the other at the Royal Grecian (with R. Phillips as the Brothers). On the same date there was produced at the City of London Theatre yet another version (with Charles Pitt as the heroes). Two days later the stage of the Standard Theatre was occupied with another—the eighth—adaptation, whilst two months afterwards, on May 19, 'a literal translation of the French play was produced at the Astor Palace Opera House, New York.' This piece, however, was called The Vendetta, and G. V. Brooke appeared as the dei Franchi. It will be remembered that Brooke was drowned in the wreck of the London (July 11, 1866)." A few weeks after the production of the Boucicault version at the Princess's Theatre at least two comic paraphrases were staged. The first, which rejoiced in the prodigiously humorous title of O. Gemini, or the Brothers of Co(u)rse, was at the hands of the Punch celebrities, G. A. Beckett and Mark Lemon. The second was written by Charles Selby, and could not boast of a title more apposite than The Camberwell Brothers. An adaptation of the Théâtre Historique version was given on Dec. 15, 1860, at the Princess's Theatre, some seven weeks after Fechter made his début as an English actor.

Fechter was supported by Augustus Harris as Chateau-Renaud, Meadows as Colonna, Rose Leclercq as Folichonne, and Miss Murray as Emilie. In the version of the original used by Fechter, the curtain rose on the Opera House scene. Six years later, namely 1866, and at the Lyceum Theatre, Fechter again appeared as the twins ("whose personalities he differentiated with the subtlety beyond Kean's power"), and he was then aided by George Jordan (Chateau-Renaud), Hermann Vezin (Montgiron), Sam Emery (Orlando), Widdicomb (Colonna), Miss Ternan (Mme. dei Franchi), and Miss Henrade (Emilie). Other revivals of less note of this fascinating play took place in 1864 and 1876, the scene on both occasions being the Princess's Theatre. Fechter's revival of 1866 was not to be resisted by that versatile genius H. J. Byron, and we find the records contain particulars of his perversion first performed at the now dead and gone Globe Theatre on May 17, 1869. Byron dropped an "r" and amusingly labelled his skit The Corsican Bothers; or, the Troublesome Twins. It was Byron, too, who first took permissible liberties with the characters' names, for we find, for Fabien and Louis dei Franchi, Fabien and Louis dei Flunkie. Another comic treatment (produced at Brighton in 1870) was styled A New Edition of the Corsican Brothers; or, the Kompact, the Kick, and the Kombat.

The Lyceum autumn season of 1880 commenced on Sept. 18 with a very elaborate revival of Boucicault's version as used by Kean twenty-eight years before. William Terriss was the Chateau-Renand of the Irving revival, Elwood the Montgiron, the now famous Arthur Wing Pinero the Meynard; whilst Miss Pauncefort was Mme. dei Franchi, Miss Alma Murray the Coralie, and Miss Fowler Emilie de Lesparre. Irving revived the play in May, 1891. Between that date and that of Oct. 10, 1906, when Martin Harvey's revival took place at the Theatre Royal, Birmingham, there have been no important performances of the old piece derived from Dumas, though Miss Litton, aided by Hermann Vezin and Mr. Charles Calvert, appeared in it at the Theatre Royal, Glasgow, in 1881; whilst in 1883 Kyrle Bellew played the title parts throughout the provinces.

In conjunction with H. P. Stephens, Sir Frank Burnand wrote a farcical version which, under the title of The Corsican Brothers and Co., Ltd., was produced at the London Gaiety on Oct. 25, 1880, with E. W. Royce as the brothers, Dallas as Madame dei Franchi, Nellie Farren as Chateau-Renaud, Connie Gilchrist as Montgiron, and Kate Vaughan as Emilie. Another comic treatment produced at the Philharmonic Theatre, Nov. 20, 1880, flourished under the style and title of The Coster Twin Brothers, whilst the ordinarily resourceful George R. Sims had to call to his aid "The Babes in the Wood" legend, for his version done at the Theatre Royal, Hull, March 19, 1881, was christened The Corsican Brother-Babes in the Wood; and Cecil Raleigh, in preparing the Royalty Theatre piece of 1889, could not get on without the aid of Mr. Barnes of New York, for The New Corsican Brothers admittedly was a funny hotch-potch of the two plays

VARIETY GOSSIP.

Messrs. Klaw and Erlanger are organising a syndicate with £20,000,000 capital to buy music-hall realty all over the world. With this object in view Mr. Klaw and Mr. Erlanger's adviser, Mr. Levy Meyer, has already sailed for London. The capital is practically assured. It is stated that a great many halls are on offer in different parts of Europe. The syndicate will not be likely to get foothold in England.

The engagement of Yvette Guilbert at the Palace, which was to have terminated this week, has been further lengthened by a week at the request of Mr. Alfred Butt, who has persuaded her to forego a portion of her vacation at Marienbad, and so to continue her perfromances at the Palace until Saturday next. In an interview madame has expressed her delight at her Palace reception: "They are wonderful in their warm applause. We French are called responsive, but I cannot remember greater cordiality than I have received during this visit."

The production of a sketch called Gay Ostend reminds us that the London Hippodrome, on its opening on Jan. 15, 1900, produced an amphibious burletta, by Henry Chance Newton, entitled Giddy Ostend; or, The Absent-minded Millionaire, in which Little Tich played the principal part. The plage of the famous seaside resort was one of the scenes, and it was fronted with real water. A ballet of prettily-costumed sea-bathers was also a feature of the representation.

Mr. Joe Lyons some time since formulated a plan of establishing in the West End of London houses of entertainment with winter gardens attached, and it was thought when he purchased Exeter Hall that that famous rendezvous of the orator would become a high-class establishment of the kind; but he is under contract not to turn the place into a licensed house, a theatre, or a music hall; and he has, indeed, stated that nothing shall be done with it that would be inconsistent with its past traditions. Mendelssohn first produced and conducted his Elijah at Exeter Hall, and its walls have echoed back the notes of the finest singers of the nineteenth century, as before it passed into the possession of the Young Men's Christian Association, in 1880, it was used for the concerts of the Sacred Harmonic Society.

Prince Robert de Broglie's marriage with Mrs. Estelle Alexander has been declared illegal, and that lady has been deprived of any right to use the name of Broglie. She was married to the Prince at Chicago, where she was a concert singer of some note. It was her second matrimonial essay. The pair, it will be remembered, were at the Tivoli during the Music Hall Strike, but their appearance did not cause any great sensation. Prince Robert now intends to get married with the least possible delay according to the requirements of French law. He is determined that the marriage shall be made legal in France, and his child legitimatised.

Mr. Walter C. Kelly, who made his first appearance in England at the Palace on Monday, and did extremely well, was originally a politician, and, incidentally, an hotel proprietor. He became associated with the profession in consequence of a speech at a little banquet in New York, when he just told them a few things, using dialect when necessary, and causing laughter. Messrs. Klaw and Erlanger asked him to go on the stage, and he did.

One night, when he was playing with Marie Dressler, in New York, she was suddenly taken ill, and the management begged him to go on and do a single specialty to fill in. He had never tried a monologue, but Percy Williams insisted on it, offering to give him a hundred dollars if he failed. He went on, and "they ate it up."

In Bridgeport, Conn., a committee from one of the Irish societies waited on Mr. Kelly and asked him to change the ending of his police-court story so that the Irishman, Rafferty, would not get the worst of it. He demurred to the proposal, and this is how they came back to him: "Av course, Misther Kelly, ye will use yer own judgment. A month ago Misther Aubrey Boucicault played here in The Shaughraun, and we wint to him and asked him to wear a wig of another colour. He used his own judgment, just as you are going to do, but he had to git a new set of scenery before he left town."

Mr. Albert Augustus Gilmer, managing-director of the Stoke Newington Palace, was a witness in the Probate Court on Thursday in connection with his executorship to the late Howard Paul. In his evidence, Mr. Gilmer said that Mr. Howard Paul first married Miss Featherstonhaugh, the actress, who used to give imitations of Sims Reeves. His second wife was Florence Arthur. Mr. Howard Paul was of perfectly sound mind. Evidence having been given as to the due execution of the will and codicil, his Lordship held that the domicile of the testator was English, and the jury found in favour of both testamentary papers. His Lordship pronounced for them, with costs.

Mr. John Lawson will be seen in Mr. Cecil Raleigh's sketch, The King's Minister, at the Holloway Empire, during the forthcoming week. This episode has proved to be one of Mr. Lawson's biggest successes on the Stoll tour. For the next two years Mr. Lawson has been engaged to give a repertoire of his sketches at all the principal towns of the Stoll tour.

Mrs. John Lawson will be at the Paragon and Walthamstow next week with The Devil's Sunday, which is drawing packed houses at the Hippodrome, Woolwich, this week. The setting of this sketch, under the eye of John Lawson, still remains one of the best that can possibly be seen. Mrs. Lawson, as the frivolous, feather-brained Fay Faber, still gives a very intense and remarkable performance. Mrs. Richard Pole, the authoress of the smart-set episode, is writing another sketch for Mrs. Lawson, which she thinks will prove even a bigger success than The Devil's Sunday.

Miss Denise Orme will make her first appearance at the Palace on Monday, when she will sing some of her musical-comedy successes, among them being that extremely popular number from The Lady Dandies, "I'm sorry." Miss Orme will also play the violin, as she did in The Little Michus.

Among the engagements which have already been made for the Christmas pantomime at the Lyceum are Brown, Newland, and Leclerq, the famous Ethiopian comedians, and Miss Sybil Arundale, who is to play Polly, Robinson Crusoe's sweetheart. Miss Arundale has hitherto masqueraded chiefly as a "boy," doing so most successfully in My Lady Molly, at Terry's, and at the Empire in a Revue. She is clever enough for anything, and is sure to give a good account of herself. As already announced, the Crusoe of this production will be Miss Dorothy Craske, of the Empire.

A new grand ballet, adapted from the immensely successful operette Les Cloches de Corneville, is in preparation at the Alhambra. The production is to be on an unusually lavish scale. Ever since "the bells" began to ring so merrily at the Folly (afterwards Toole's) Theatre on Feb. 23, 1878, Robert Planquette's tuneful work has been running at intervals in the provinces, and the interest in it is likely to be revived by the sumptuous presentation of the work in ballet form.

The Alhambra Theatre, Belfast, of which Mr. Sinclair Neill is manager, closes to-night (Saturday), for painting, &c., reopening on Monday, Aug. 5, with a powerful drama.

Mr. Richard Thornton has taken over the properties of the Sunderland Theatres Company, Ltd., viz., the Avenue Theatre and the old Royal Theatre in the Wearside borough. The new proprietor intends to run the latter on its old lines as the melodrama house of the town. At the Avenue exhibitions of pictures, &c., will probably be the order of the day, with an occasional reversion to legitimate work and varieties.

Mr. Walter de Frece is to be congratulated on the latest balance-sheet of the Palace Theatre, Manchester, Ltd. Since Mr. de Frece has had the control of this, one of the most beautiful theatres in the North, the popularity of the place has increased by leaps and bounds, and the excellent programmes submitted week by week are greatly appreciated by Manchester theatre-goers, as is shown by the increased receipts. Mr. de Frece took command in 1905, and, notwithstanding the erection of two new music-halls in the immediate neighbourhood, has succeeded in placing the company in a very solid financial position.

For the last three years the net profits have been:—1905, £2766; 1906, £8116; and 1907, £9280. In 1906 the amount of reserve was used in writing off the alteration and decoration suspense account, while for the past year it is placed to general reserve, making that fund £6000, against which there are investments held of £12,776—an increase over the former year of £5757. The premises are freehold, and the balance-sheet shows the company in a sound position.

The esteemed and popular manager of the Liverpool Tivoli, Mr. James Marks, determined upon making his first outing something to be remembered, the result being that last Sunday, when everything was over, nothing but praise was heard from 250 participants. The original intention was to limit the invitations to the staff of the theatre, but owing to an outside interest exhibiting itself, patrons were allowed to participate, with the result that the special corridor carriages were well filled. Leaving Liverpool at 9 o'clock, the party reached Morecambe at 11 o'clock. Shortly afterwards some 150 sat down to a substantial dinner in the King's Arms Hotel, Mr. Marks occupying the chair.

The company spent the afternoon in enjoying most charming drives, and at 5.30 partook of a sumptuous tea. All arrived safely back at Liverpool about 9 o'clock. Among the visitors were Mr. Fred Willmot (director of entertainments of the Tivoli), Mrs. Marks, and Miss Lillian Victoria.

Mr. Tom Barrasford's new Hippodrome, in Sheffield, is now in course of construction, and that popular entrepreneur anticipates opening in the late autumn. The new house is situate in Cambridge-street, a few yards from the present Empire, with a frontage of forty-five yards and a depth of eighty yards—ample room for a magnificent building. Mr. Bertie Crewe, the architect of the Bedford and the Standard, Shoreditch, has planned the new place, of which the seating capacity will be between 2500 and 3000.

In Liverpool the two performances per night of drama is becoming very popular. The latest variety house to change its style of entertainment is the Roscommon Music Hall, where, next week, Mr. Percy Boucher, who successfully inaugurated the sketch system at the Royal, Breck-road, some years ago, will lead a stock company with the "legitimate." This will be the fourth hall to adopt drama within recent years; and now there remains practically but one of the smaller variety houses keeping to the old fare. Then again, a short distance away, the Muncaster, at Bootle, will on August Bank Holiday be controlled by Mr. Fred Willmot, of Liverpool, who proposes to have stock drama twice nightly. Under the present regime a full evening's drama is given.

The many friends of Mr. Thomas F. O'Brien, late assistant-manager of the Opera House, Cork, will be pleased to learn that he has been appointed manager of the Palace Theatre of Varieties there, in succession to Mr. Henry Kemble. During the ten years that he was associated with Mr. John Horgan at the Cork Opera House, Mr. O'Brien made a host of friends for himself. He possesses an excellent knowledge of the business, and his appointment is very popular. Mr. O'Brien, who starts on Aug. 1, intends to provide bills of the highest possible order at popular prices, and on the two-houses-a-night system. Several important alterations are being effected that add considerably to the comfort of the house, which is now being renovated.

The Empire, Cardiff, which is situated in one of the principal thoroughfares through which the procession passed, was magnificently decorated on Saturday last, a Royal day for the city, portraits of their Majesties being prominently displayed. For the occasion, stands were erected in front of the main entrance to the theatre, and these were occupied exclusively by the artists engaged that week, and the Empire staff and their friends. In this way a magnificent view was obtained of their Majesties, who, when passing, were accorded an enthusiastic welcome, graciously acknowledged.

A very successful charity matinée performance was given at the Leeds Empire on Saturday. Organised and managed by those indefatigable Moss-Stoll gentlemen Mr. T. Gerald Morton and Mr. Alex Galley, the performance was a record success, the programme including contributors from all the Yorkshire Stoll halls, and a crowded and distinguished audience was in evidence. The local charities will benefit very largely by the effort.

The many friends of Mr. Charles Edward Mumford will be interested to learn that he was quietly married on June 15 at St. John's Church, Secunderabad, India, to Jeannette Louisa Littaur, ballad vocalist, formerly of London. Before embarking on a tour through India Mr. Mumford served under the Macnaghten régime, principally at the Palace, Bow, and Palace, Lincoln, as musical director. He is, by the way, a native of Halifax, Yorkshire.

In consequence of the large measure of support accorded to the Palace, Attercliffe, Mr. T. Allan Edwardes, the proprietor, has decided to forego a summer vacation. The local manager, Mr. J. Lacy Lyne's efforts have succeeded in making the Palace a popular house of entertainment.

Miss Nellie Gannon, on her birthday anniversary, July 19, received some handsome presents and over 150 wires, letters, and birthday cards.

There seems now every prospect of the Blackpool Public Library, towards which Mr. Carnegie has offered £15,000, being placed on the Raikes Hall site, where the famous gardens originally stood. This land will cost about £10,000. The building will be surrounded by a park. The Blackpool Corporation has refused to permit phrenologists, physiognomists, and other "professors" of that ilk to practise on the South Shore Fairground, over which they have the power of veto.

Mr. R. G. Knowles, prior to leaving London for a short provincial tour, accepted from Messrs. John P. Harrington and Jas. W. Tate two songs, specially written and composed by them to suit the talented American's peculiar method. These are respectively entitled "The diner, the dinner, and the doctor" and "Girls, be on your dignity," and bid fair to be most successful in the States, whither Mr. Knowles sails shortly.

"The Ring Between" is the title of a new sketch, by William Felton, that will be produced at the Middlesex, on Monday next, by Miss Geraldine Montrose. Mr. Graydon saw this sketch on July 5, and immediately booked it for July 22. Miss Montrose will play the leading part, and is supported by a strong company, including the author.

"The Tiger Cat" is the name of another sketch which Mr. Graydon will produce on July 29. It is also written by William Felton, and has been secured by Miss May Woolgar Mellon, who will play the principal part, supported by the author and Mr. Fred Dobell.

Mr. B. P. Lucas, the managing-director of the Bedford, is again exerting himself in the cause of charity, and announces that he will shortly give a matinée in aid of that splendid charity the Children's Seaside Fund, which gives so much delight and pleasure to the youngsters in the neighbourhood of the Bedford.

Some heavy scoring was witnessed at The Grange, Acton, on Wednesday, when the Palace Theatre team met the Harmonists in an interesting cricket match. Instead of the twang of the guitar, the "zum" of the banjo, the Harmonists had to be content with the "biff" of the bat of Mr. Hollender, who was simply unmerciful in his swiping, scoring 107 not out. The innings included ten fours and one five. The Harmonists enjoyed, to a certain extent, their "day in the country," but their innings of 28 runs as against 259 for the Palace Theatre hardly compensated for things. The best score for the losers was made by Mr. Willoughby with a plucky stand for 12. The Brothers Hollender (B. and V.) played skittles with the wickets, taking them all.

Miss Gipsy Woolf and her Six Sunbeams, in The Mermaid of Margate, start a six months' tour in America on Oct. 1, opening at New York. As showing the enterprise of our American cousins, this successful turn was seen at the Queen's, Poplar, on the Saturday night after production, negotiations were entered into the day following, and the contract was signed on the Monday. Mr. Jack Woolf has had many offers from the Continent for this interesting scena.

The late Edward J. Margetson, a well-known composer of songs, and a member of St. James's Union Lodge, No. 180, who died after only three days' illness, has left his widow (formerly Miss Marion Wardroper, of German Reed's company) and two sons in very straitened circumstances. Efforts are being made to get the younger son, Arthur Charles Margetson, into the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys (the father was a life subscriber). Votes will be thankfully received for this deserving object by Messrs. Francis and Day's manager, Bro. John Smith, 22, Denmark-street, Charing Cross-road, W.C.

The interest evinced by Mr. Pat Carey in every scheme that makes for music-hall progress is well known to his fellow artists, and it is, therefore, with considerable regret that they hear of his resignation from the executive committee of the M.H.A.R.A., which he helped to found. Mr. Carey still retains his position as president of the Music Hall Sick Fund, a flourishing friendly society that provides sick benefits for an abnormally small weekly contribution. It has been established forty years.

An informal luncheon and conference between the theatrical representatives of the principal railway companies and a deputation of the executive committee of the Music Hall Artists' Railway Association took place at the Boulogne Restaurant, Gerrard-street, Soho, on Thursday, July 11. The following represented the Association:—Mr. W. H. Clemart (president, who occupied the chair), and Messrs. Fred Herbert (vice-chairman of the committee), Fred W. Millis (vice-president), Harry Blake, Harry Wright, Harry Bancroft, Bernard Stavordale, Douglas White (hon. treasurer), and C. Douglas Stuart (secretary).

After an excellent menu, the "bombe surprise" being a railway engine of block ice, Mr. Clemart proposed the health of the guests, which was duly responded to; after which the president placed before the theatrical managers of the railways certain suggestions relative to adding to and altering several items regarding the present concessions granted to the Association. The impracticability of certain of these was explained by the spokesman of the railway managers. But regarding one point, viz., the difficulty of crossing from the northern stations to the southern in London on Sundays, all the railway representatives present agreed that in future, providing due notice was given, free omnibuses would be provided for parties of not less than four from the great termini. This friendly function is to become a hardy annual.

Mr. Carl Hamlin, the popular musical director of the Britannia Theatre, Hoxton, concluded on Saturday his engagement there, to return to his former position as chef d'orchestre at the Foresters'. Mr. Frederick Baugh, at the conclusion of the second performance, referred to the high estimation in which Mr. Hamlin was held at the "Britt.," and asked his acceptance of a handsome double curb gold chain, subscribed for by himself and all the staff. Mr. Arnold Bell also spoke in a very congratulatory manner of the capabilities of the recipient.

Mr. William Martin, sometime manager for Mr. J. Bannister Howard, is taking over the management of F. Darrell and Company's Dramatic and Variety Agency, 415, Strand.

The 520th meeting of the Music Hall Railway Association was held on Wednesday. The members present were Fred Neiman (chairman), C. C. Bartram, Harry Wright, Fred Harrison, Harold Findon, John Alexander, Harry Bancroft, Griff, Walsh, Joe O'Gorman, Fred Herbert, and Fred Millis. The weekly statement showed that twenty-nine new members had been made, and the receipts for the week amounted to £29 10s. 6d. It was proposed and carried that tenders be invited for a supply of new cards. Mr. Douglas Stuart was authorised to pay a visit to Cardiff on Monday next, with the object of conferring with the representatives of the Taff Vale Railway Company and suggesting improvements in certain matters on that line.

Her Majesty the Queen has been graciously pleased to accept from Mr. and Mme. Zancig a copy of their recently published work, "Two Minds with but a Single Thought." The dedication of this little brochure to the British public has been gracefully and appropriately made by Mr. and Mme. Zancig in a reminder that, as Danes, there exists between them and the British public a precious link, as a single thought between two minds, namely, homage to England's Beloved Queen.

"Her Convict Lover," a new sketch by Arthur Jefferson, is to be produced at the Camberwell Palace on Monday.

Mr. Albert Chevalier paid a flying matinée visit to the Theatre Royal, Margate, on Monday afternoon, and met with a very enthusiastic reception. Mr. Chevalier's company included Mr. Alfred H. West, solo pianist and accompanist; Miss Daisy Irvine, soprano; Mr. Harry Brett, comedian; Mr. Arthur Brankston; and Master Bertie Baxter, comedian. In the second part of the programme Mr. Chevalier appeared as Mr. Turby in the farcical sketch The Goose with the Golden Eggs.

Mr. Will Oliver has not been quite himself this last week or two, and has taken himself off to a quiet little spot at Sandgate. He writes from the Kent Hotel to say he is doing well, and mentions the fact that it was in 1868 when he last visited Sandgate for a four weeks' engagement at the Alhambra, then known as "The Brick."

There he first met the clever Walton family, also the McCarthy family, both of whom have since become famous all over the world. There are but few alive to-day who used to amuse the soldiers in those days. Will is full of praise for the up-to-date manner in which the show is run at the present time by Mr. Fred Baugh, and says he would like to induce a few London managers to run down and see the artists they put on for five minutes do a legitimate full show, and he feels confident that a lot that are now kept in the background would be brought to the front.

Mr. David Hart, the well-known manager of Gravesend, is going on a health-giving holiday. He leaves on Thursday morning by the s.s. Cæsar for a trip to the fishing fleet in the North Sea, and is expected to be away for about eight days.

Miss Ruby Helder, the girl baritone, having completed an engagement of ten weeks at the Empire, is now singing nightly at the Tivoli, and excites no little attention as "the girl with a man's voice." She has been engaged at the Apollo Theatre, Paris, for September, after which she proceeds to Germany.

At one o'clock on Thursday afternoon the original "Old Bailey" was put up for public auction. The sale comprised the whole of the interior fixtures of the four criminal courts, the original prisoners' dock, and the fittings of the prisoners' cells. The heavy iron grill gate and enclosure to cell, with iron bar grill overhead, protecting fanlight, and the heavy deal door, with the original grating through which Jack Sheppard, the famous highwayman, escaped, realised £7 10s. The prisoners' dock, the jury box, the judge's seat, and all the principal objects of interest were acquired by Mme. Tussaud.

Swan and Vesta, who have recently returned from India, opened on Monday at the Queen's, Poplar, with their miniature comic opera, In Nelson's Day, and, owing to their enormous success, signed three return dates with Mr. Jack Woolf after their first performance.

Griff, the juggler with japes, has handed over to the Terriers' Emergency Fund the handsome sum of £7 10s., a third part of monies received through him and others from various sources on board ship during voyages to and from South Africa. Best thanks from the fraternity have been conveyed to the popular clown, who was assisted in his charitable efforts by Chas. Stevens, La Belle Nello, Harry Tate's Motoring company, Miss Winifred Hare, and the Three Braggs. The Music Hall Home and the Music Hall Benevolent Fund also benefit by like sums raised through the instrumentality of Griff and his artistic companions. A large parcel of periodicals and magazines from Miss Tots Davis has been received with many thanks by the inmates of the Music Hall Home.

Mr. Frank Leo, a song writer, sued Mr. Joseph Cregan, comedian, in the Westminster County Court, for £35 commission alleged to be due under an agreement. Mr. Rose Innes, for the plaintiff, said his client met the defendant at a concert at Battersea. He was much impressed by his voice, and as a result negotiations were entered into by which the defendant agreed to sing songs written for him by the plaintiff, and to pay a commission of 40 per cent. on salaries arising out of engagements procured for him by the plaintiff. Under the terms of that agreement there was now a sum of £35 due, which the defendant refused to pay.

In cross-examination, Mr. Frank Leo said he did not consider 40 per cent. a high rate of commission under the circumstances, as it was extremely difficult for a beginner to get an introduction to the stage. The defendant's contention was that only one song out of the ten which were supplied to him by the plaintiff was a success. As a consequence, he had to find other business. His Honour, in giving judgment, said he was clearly of the opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. The terms of the agreement were perfectly clear.

Miss Fanny Robina's turn at the Royal Standard, Pimlico, this week, is one into which a host of good things are crowded. She makes her first appearance in the picturesque costume of a principal boy, which suits her admirably. Then this very handsome boy tells us that he has been to a concert at the Albert Hall, and forthwith we are treated to several of the popular songs which he has heard at the great musical establishment. From "Wearin' o' the green" Miss Robina goes on to sing, in her own expressive style, such numbers as "Too old at forty," a Tyrolean refrain, "He was a pal," concluding with a really capital performance of a verse from "The golden city." Then, after a change of dress, the talented artist appears before us in matronly attire, and in a very pretty song, we learn why she is not tired of England, the reason being there is a king in the castle—or, rather, the six-roomed house, which answers the same purpose—and the king is a baby boy, and the chorus is sung by a young lady (Miss Florry Cooper) from the gallery, and the vocal item is one which receives the compliment of vociferous applause from the audience, the voices harmonising with excellent effect.

Miss Florry Cooper, who has established herself a favourite at the Royal Standard this week, has a most pleasant personality, and is a sweet-voiced singer of refined songs. Attired in a rose-pink knickerbocker costume, which becomes her exceedingly well, the young lady imparts some sound advice in a few verses which tell us to "Smile, smile, smile," no matter what trouble there may be, or how sad one may really feel at heart. The song proves quite to the liking of the listeners in the auditorium. We next get a sympathetic rendering of "The stars are angel faces." In this Miss Cooper tells the story of a little girl who has lost her mother, and who has been led to believe that, as the song says, "the stars are angel faces." So, naturally, the child worships the tiny twinkling constellations in the heavens, and wishes her father to point out the star which is her mother's face. Miss Cooper most feelingly renders the lines both of this and her previous number, her enunciation being particularly clear and distinct.

The members of the Actors' Church Union, at their annual meeting on Monday, decided to admit music halls to the sphere of their operations. The Bishop of Southwark said it was perfectly plain that the distinction between music halls and theatres was melting away, while Mr. C. J. Cameron said if they excluded music-hall artists the Union would soon come to an end, for he was afraid before very long there would be no "legitimate" artists left.

The manager of the New Musical Comedy and Concert Artists Agency, 16, Green-street, Leicester-square, W., who inserted an advertisement in The Era last week, informs us that the enormous number of replies received will cause some little delay in their acknowledgment. Correspondents are informed, however, that their applications are receiving careful attention.

The success of the East Ham Palace of Varieties, which has not yet completed its first year, has been so great that the directors are able to declare an interim dividend at the rate of 20 per cent. per annum on the first six months' working. This result has been achieved despite the fact that the hall for one month out of the six was barred by the Federation, owing to the strike. Mr. Arthur J. Barclay, the manager, and all concerned deserve hearty congratulations.

That amusing member of the Force, Sergeant Brue, will be on his beat again on Monday, at the Hippodrome, Manchester, where will be produced a condensed version of the old Strand Theatre's last success. The cracksman, Crookie Scrubbs, in which part young George Barrett made such a hit, is to be played by Mr. Maitland Marler, who is playing the Burglar in The Gentleman Cracksman at the South London.

"The Wheel of Avernus" is an exciting form of amusement that has just been established at the Balkans Exhibition. It combines the delights of motoring on hilly roads with the thrills of the familiar switchback. A motor-car suspended from strong steel arms runs on rails round the rim of an enormous steel wheel, driven at ten miles an hour by a gas engine, and if the wheel were true the ride would no doubt be pleasant enough, for the car is twenty or thirty feet in the air. As a matter of fact, however, its rim is bent into hollows, and steep rises, and as the carriage follows these as a matter of course at high speed, but in complete safety, the excitement can be imagined. Mr. Cecil Hartley, its originator, calls it motoring in mid-air.

The employees of the Camberwell Empire held their first summer outing on Sunday last, departing from the hall at nine o'clock by four-horse brakes, for the Crown and Anchor Hotel, Long Ditton, Surrey. The party was ably catered for by the genial proprietor, Tom Green. Among the crowd were Messrs. Jesse Sparrow, H. Bawn, P. Ford,, E. C. Webb, G. Burgess, W. Nutt, Ben Woodger, L. Darby, R. Jewell, Brisley, Deans, Shedden, Caley, McOrd, H. Davis, H. Silk, H. Norris, W. Norris, L. Young, Mrs. Dalton Walker, and the Misses Heer, Hollick, Hancock, C. Dalton, E. Dalton, and D. Dalton. The following visitors accompanied the party:—Messrs. E. F. Moy and W. Cecil Jeapes (of the Graphic Cinématograph Co.), J. H. Brandon, Mrs. Percy Ford, Mrs. W. Nutt, Mrs. Woodger, Mrs. Darby, Mrs. Shackleford, and the Misses Hetty and Eva Shackleford and Miss Anderson.

After lunch, at which the chair was taken by the popular manager of the Empire, Mr. Percy Ford (the author of the clever sketch, The Spy), and the vice-chair by Captain Ben Woodger, the party enjoyed an afternoon on the river, returning to tea, and continuing with a musical programme, at which the stars were Mrs. Walker, Mr. Brisley, Mr. H. Davis, and others. The start for home was made about 8.30 p.m., and about 10.45, at the Metropole Hotel, Denmark Hill, the party finally dispersed after a most enjoyable day. The committee wish to thank Miss Vesta Victoria and the other ladies and gentlemen who so kindly contributed to the funds.

Mr. Tom Fancourt and Miss Jeanie Rubie have been brightening the programme this week at the Empress, Brixton, with their amusing act Nipper, the Messenger Boy, in which humour and smartness are so happily combined. The production is a great success, its lightness and brightness supplying exactly the sort of entertainment for the hot weather.

A case of some interest and amusement was heard before the Registrar of Bow Court on Wednesday, when Henry Anthony, a music-hall artist, now appearing at the Canterbury, brought an action to recover £5, balance of wages alleged to be due from Messrs. F. and M. Abrahams, proprietors of the Queen's, Poplar. Plaintiff, in the course of his evidence, said that he was an "illusionist," and known on the stage as the "Swankiest Swanker of all the Swanks." In April last his agents made an engagement for his appearance at the Queen's at a salary of £8 a week. At the end of the week defendants only gave him £3, and refused to pay him any more.

Mr. Jack Woolf (manager to the defendants) denied that he ever made any contract with the plaintiff. His agents at Liverpool notified him that they had booked "Mark Anthony," but plaintiff was not the man they expected. He only came on the stage, swanked to the audience, then called an attendant, and got a twopenny drink for nothing. The Registrar gave judgment for plaintiff for the amount claimed.

The latest quotations for music-hall shares are as follow: Alhambra, 30s.; Canterbury, ½; Empire (15s. paid) 1⅛, ditto (10s. paid) 1⅛; London Pavilion Ordinary 4⅜, ditto Preference 5; London Coliseum, ⅛; Metropolitan, ½; Moss Empire 5, ditto 5 per cent. Preference 3⅞; Oxford, 6⅜; Palace, 15s.; Tivoli, 6⅛.

Before the Master of the Rolls, the President of the Probate Division, and Lord Justice Kennedy, Mr. C. A. Bartram, the defendant, appealed from a judgment of Mr. Justice Lawrence, who tried the action of Butt v. Bartram, with a special jury, which gave Mr. Alfred Butt £100 damages for libel. Mr. Cannot said that Mr. Alfred Butt claimed in the action damages for a libel which appeared in Variety. The defendant, Mr. C. A. Bartram, was the London agent, and admitted his employment by the proprietors of the paper to write it, but denied that he wrote or authorised the words concerning the plaintiff to be written. The grounds of the appeal were that there was no evidence of publication by the defendant of the libel to go to th jury, and no evidence to show that he was the writer of the article.

The Master of the Rolls: In short, your case is that the plaintiff should have sued the newspaper. Mr. Cannot replied that was in substance his case, but it was enough for him to show that the action would not lie against his client, who, he submitted, was entitled to judgment. The Master of the Rolls: The defendant was the London agent, and wrote the "London Letter," and the libel appears under the heading of "London News," and is part of the article which is signed C. A. Bartram. How can you disclaim liability? After Mr. Cannot had put his case before the Court, the Master of the Rolls said there was really nothing in this appeal, and it must be dismissed. The other judges concurred. The appeal was accordingly dismissed, with costs.

SONGS, WRITERS, AND SINGERS.

AMONG the many new songs just accepted for publication by Messrs. Francis and Day may be mentioned "Sally" (featured by Miss Anna Kenwick), by H. Taylor; "I do pity myself!" (Harry Champion), by Barnes and Weston; "Has anyone seen my poodle dog?" (Billy Williams), by Nat Clifford and Herbert Rule; and "The treasure ship" (Harry Anderson), by that well-known and always consistent writer, T. W. Connor.

MISS ETHEL HAYDON has made a great impression during the week at the Holloway Empire with Leigh Pether's "The home that's home for me" and J. Thompson's "The sunbeam and the rose." Both are published by Messrs. Francis and Day.

THE latest additions to Messrs. Francis and Day's "Sixpenny Pops" are the favourite numbers, "If the man in the moon were a coon" and "My castle in Spain." An extraordinary demand has arisen for No. 347 of the series, which is, "If those lips could only speak!" by Charles Ridgewell and Will Godwin.

IT is always pleasant to hear of talent appreciated, and Charles Collins, the well-known writer and melodist, of "Wooden hut" and "Three's jolly good company" fame, has just been presented by Mr. George D'Albert with a gold watch. Mr. Collins, as is well known, is responsible for the ex-Mohawk's "My daddy's a gentleman."

MR. JOHNNY WORMAN has "struck ile" with a comic song by F. W. Leigh, entitled "Good!" and at the Middlesex a few nights since raised shouts of laughter with this item and his "On the mat" and "The peacemaker." It is quite on the cards that much more will be seen in town of this good comedian.

A GRAND selection of the airs from Lady Tatters has been arranged by Warwick Williams, and is being issued by Messrs. Francis and Day. Simultaneously Messrs. Boosey and Co. will have ready the selection arranged by the same hand for full military band.

MISS HARRIETT VERNON, at the Metropole Theatre, Manchester, last week, made a great success with a new song, "On beautiful Lake Lucerne." Mr. Walter Reynolds, of the well-known publishing firm, Messrs. Price and Reynolds, Berners-street, travelled especially from London to hear it, and purchased it at once. There are a few free permissions for pantomime, and it is already secured by four of our prominent pantomime managers.

MR. TOM LEO, whose "Too lazy to live," by Maurice Scott, has set all Northampton singing during the current week, will shortly produce a novelty song from the same pen of a type hitherto unexploited on the variety stage. The comedian's music has been again arranged by John S. Baker, whose song for Miss Fannie Leslie, "The boys of London Town," still is talked of by lovers of good melody. Tom Leo opens at the Pier Pavilion, Southport, on Monday.

CHARLES RIDGEWELL, whose tuneful song for Mr. Charles Whittle, entitled "Billy Muggins," has sold literally by thousands, has just completed another ditty of a comic nature, entitled "I'm Dunn!—Mister Dunn!" which is likely to be in as great request among comedians as the number which has done the popular Yorkshire comedian such yeoman service.

NOT only is Messrs. Mellor, Lawrance, and Gifford's tuneful Dutch song, "I'm going back to the Fatherland," the absolute "hit" of Messrs. Huddlestone and Tiller's successful production, By the Zuyder Zee, at the Winter Gardens, Blackpool, but its success is being duplicated at the London Hippodrome, in the production of the same name, wherein it is sung at every performance by Nipper Lupino Lane. Mr. Will Evans's talented company have also been singing it all the week at the London, Shoreditch, with signal success; while Misses Lena Verdi, Lilian Lea, and other well-known artists find this song an admirable medium for the exploitation of their abilities. The number is published by the Monte Carlo Publishing Company.

IN addition to Mr. J. F. Lambe's vocal gem, "Queen of Old Samara," which, according to the local Press, is now being whistled and sung all over Australasia, Miss Bijou Russell has scored very heavily at Mr. Harry Rickard's halls with another of the Monte Carlo Company's publications, viz., "When, when, when is your ship a-coming home?" by Paul Pelham and Herbert Rule, which bids fair to equal, if not out-rival, "Samara" in popularity "down under."

Two of the songs which Miss Vesta Victoria has just purchased from Messrs. John P. Harrington and Jas. W. Tate are entitled "Queen of the Jujah Islands" and "Nevermore," and are said to fit this talented comedy artist like the proverbial glove. She will introduce them to English audiences prior to taking the songs to America. Miss Victoria is making as great a success in Brighton this week with the same author and composer's "sequel" song, "I've told his missis all about him," as she did in the States with the same unprecedentedly popular number.

MISS DOLLIE BELL'S three troupes of lady vocalists and dancers, who go to America in a week's time under engagement to Weber and Bush, have been entirely equipped with songs by the Monte Carlo Publishing Company. Three of the principal numbers which each of the troupes will feature are "No thanks, Mr. Octopus," by Percy Edgar and Kenneth Lyle; "Don't go back to Carolina," by Mellor, Lawrance, and Gifford; and "When, when, when is your ship a-coming home?" by Paul Pelham and Herbert Rule.

ONE of the brightest comedy songs published by the Monte Carlo Publishing Company is Ballard Macdonald and Donovan Meher's "taking" ditty, 'Will he answer 'Goo-goo'?" and little wonder is it that the song is already getting greatly talked about and popular, considering it is nightly and simultaneously sung by two such talented artists as Miss Clarice Mayne at the Oxford and Tivoli, and Miss Dorothy L. Clark at all her engagements.

"MY EMERALD QUEEN" is the title of a very charming song written by T. M. Down, which will be published forthwith by Messrs. Ascherberg, Hopwood, and Crew. The refrain is typically Irish, and principal boys who want a "sure thing" for pantomime should secure this number without delay. A limited number of performing rights will be issued for the halls. Another winner by the same author is "When you fly," also issued by Ascherberg. The chorus is melodious and catchy.

FARCES AT THE TIVOLI.

Mr. Joseph Wilson—himself an actor of considerable gifts—has an abiding belief in the attractions of farce; and, strong in the faith that is in him, he produced two at the Tivoli on Monday, the hottest day that we have yet had during this sunless summer. Such light fare was felt to be particularly appropriate, and on the whole the initiatory experiment may claim to have been successful. In Mr. W. H. Denny has been secured a London comedian who delighted us in the latter days of the Savoy as Wilfred Shadbolt in the original production of The Yeomen of the Guard, and whose performance of Don Alhambra de Bolero, the Grand Inquisitor in The Gondoliers, and Scarpio in Utopia, Limited, bring back happy recollections of halcyon times, when the playgoing public had not capitulated to the flightiness of musical comedy.

In Minding the Shop, Mr. Denny as a bucolic policeman husband, grumbles unduly and in good round terms at the alleged domestic incompetence of his wife. They get to high words, and the lady declares that she is prepared to hoe the potatoes if he cares to peel them and at the same time to mind the shop. In this way domestic peace is temporarily secured. The wife goes to her outdoor task, leaving the grumbler to look after the small general business and to make a beef-steak pudding. The result may easily be guessed, and when the missus returns with her soldier brother the worries of the household-ruling policeman are complicated by jealousy. The usual explanations ensue, and at the conclusion the husband takes to heart the lesson that was taught many years ago in Domestic Economy, a farce made famous by the late J. L. Toole, and the curtain falls on the resumption of harmonious conjugal relations. Mr W. H. Denny plays with the sure touch of an experienced comedian, and causes great laughter by his attempts at combining business with pudding-making. Miss Margaret Murch plays with humour the part of the wife, and Mr. Maitland Dicker is an amusing soldier.

Man—the Brute, the second farce, which brightens the latter part of the Tivoli programme, is from the pen of Mr. Harry Grattan, and is played by the following cast:—

Mr. Wiffins.....MR. HARRY GRATTAN
Mrs. Wiffins .....MR. FRED EMNEY
Ramble Rhodes .....MR. TOM TAYLOR

The author has contrived a very amusing piece of extravagance on the "taming the shrew" principle. Mrs. Wiffins has an obedient, timid, and meek better half, who comes home loaded with parcels and a lawn-mower. He has been unable to bring along the sanitary dustbin, which has been left at the station, and for this lapse in obedience to the behests of his terrible partner he is denied the luxury of a cup of tea for which he pleads very hard. During his absence from the scene of his slavish obedience to the behests of imperious woman, Mrs. Wiffins is surprised and held up by a tramp-burglar, who, after abstracting five shillings for a fern that he is hawking, compels the lady to get him tea, and also makes her sing while he burgles the house. When Wiffins returns with the dustbin he is at first terrified, but when he sees the shrewish Mrs. Wiffins bringing the burglar tea his blood is up, and he makes a furious onslaught, belabouring the hulking tramp with every article of furniture he can lay hands on. This unexpected valour on the part of Wiffins effectually tames Mrs. W., and on the departure of the tramp her excessive amiability towards her lion-hearted husband can be well understood. Mr. Fred Emney's dames have found many admirers in pantomime, and his broad treatment of the part of Mrs. Wiffins kept the house in roars of laughter on Monday night, when Mr. Harry Grattan, the author, gave him excellent support as Wiffins; Mr. Tom Taylor as the tramp was responsible for a capital study of low brutality.

"THE THIN RED LINE."

A Sketch, by E. C. Matthews, produced at the Walthamstow Palace, on Friday, July 12.

Sergt. Branscombe .....MR. WATSON HUME
Sir Harry Harding ....MR. SANDERSON MOFFATT
Nelly Branscombe .....MISS PHYLLIS GRAHAM

An undoubted success. Mr. J. Sanderson Moffatt, who produces The Thin Red Line, has reason to congratulate himself on the manner in which the little play by Mr. E. C. Matthews was received by the audience last Friday night. So interested had the spectators become in the story of Sergeant Branscombe and his grand-daughter that the curtain had to be raised four times at the conclusion. The plot deals with an episode that is ever dear to the heart of the true-born Britisher—the Battle of Balaclava—and the late Sir W. H. Russell's famous reference to "the thin red line" supplies a telling title. Sergt. Branscombe, proud of his Victoria Cross and of his grand-daughter, Nelly, has also a landlord in the person of Sir Harry Harding. The gallant old soldier, in the correct uniform of the famous "93rd" down to a braid and a button, is spending the sunset of his life in the peaceful retirement of lodge-keeper at Sir Harry's home. The sergeant, in the great battle, saved the life of the hero's father, and the young man has, naturally, a great affection for the old man. All the same, he has contracted a marriage with Nelly, and herein lies the difficulty. The marriage has been celebrated in Scotland according to Scottish form, and Miss Nelly does not seem to think the union quite "square." The strong contrast between the old man's belief that his grand-daughter has been dishonoured and his happiness when he discovers the truth is grandly depicted. There is a very fine scene when the old man and the young man both display the Victoria Cross, nobly earned in each case. The whole play pulsates with emotion, and is written in that fine strain so dear to the hearts of popular audiences. Sergt. Branscombe has a grand-daughter who has been secretly married to Sir Harry Harding. The poor girl gives her grandfather the impression that the marriage is not one at all, Sir Harry having married her under another name; and when the old man discovers that the supposed betrayer of the girl is no other than his own landlord, he hurls at him the vials of his wrath. Fortunately the marriage proves to be valid enough, and, to the girl's astonishment, the young and dreaded landlord turns out to be her real husband.

The interpretation of the thrilling story is in the most capable hands. Mr. Watson Hume gives a magnificent study of the rough old soldier, Sergt. Branscombe, his pathos being quite equal to his humour. Some of the longer speeches—particularly that in which he describes the battle—are delivered with great effect and a refreshing command of the best elocutionary methods. Mr. Sanderson Moffatt, looking strikingly young and handsome, plays the brave young baronet with all that fervour that is absolutely requisite for such a part. In appearance and manner he is just the man a young girl would "go mad" about. Miss Phyllis Graham is very charming and girlish as Nelly. A little nervous at the outset, the young actress soon warmed to her work, and her look of horror, changing to joy, when the bullet aimed at her lover by her grandfather is met by the Victoria Cross on his breast, thus saving his life, is very finely conveyed. The entire play arouses the deepest interest of the spectator, and holds it to the end. The scene is a pretty one, a cottage outside the lodge gates of Sir Harry's house making a charming background for a charming story.

LONDON VARIETY THEATRES.

THE PALACE.

Yvette Guilbert, like Sarah Bernhardt and Coquelin, comes to London time after time to find in the most cosmopolitan city of the world that high artistic appreciation which must make her temporary pilgrimage a very delightful one. She is announced as making her last appearance behind the variety footlights previous to adventuring her gifts on the legitimate stage. Had fate so willed it, Yvette might have been a pillar of the House of Molière and have played Camille or Frou-Frou to admiring throngs of Parisians. She remained to assist in bringing the talent of the variety theatres within the four corners of the domains of art, and might be content with such an achievement. Anyway, she possesses a magnetic personality that must win the suffrages of the public on whatever stage she appears, and she is undoubtedly well placed at the Palace. Attired in the ample gown of figured silk and crinoline of our grandmothers' times, this mistress of the art of diction in song is listened to with rapt attention in all parts of the house, and it is pleasant to note that as much applause comes from the gallery as the stalls. She opened on the night of our visit with "Légende Bretonne," and also introduced two English songs, "The bargain" and "Mary was a housemaid"—all of them most perfectly rendered, and with a complete mastery of comedy and pathos.

Mr. Butt's cosmopolitan desire to rack the hemispheres for talent has been instrumental in introducing to the British public Mr. Walter Kelly, who comes with a deservedly high reputation from "the other side." Mr. Kelly regales the Britisher with a fresh style of humour, and so good is he that he should be able to dump himself down in this tight little island for an indefinite period. Attired in the simple frock coat and continuations of high civilisation, Mr. Kelly appears as the Virginia judge administering the justice that is meted out in this country to the riotous and disorderly by the Stipendiaries. The prisoners brought before the judge are mostly niggers, and one recognises at once the perfect command of the dialect of the civilised African; but each of them possesses a marked individuality with the quaintest possible expressions. Then there is an Irishman who has been raising Cain, and his defence is as ingenious as it is funny. Kelly, at the Palace, should certainly not be missed.

Les Fleury Duo, another of the popular young managing-director's most recent engagements, present a Revuette, in three scenes, wherein are to be seen Paris types. Mme. Fleury parodies Otero and also the great Sarah, and give a danse acrobatique of a distinctly daring and novel type. M. Fleury submits also a clever imitation of Coquelin as Cyrano de Bergerac, and introduces familiar types of the German, the Italian, the Russian, and the American. M. Fleury joins madame in the danse acrobatique to which we have alluded. The pair play twenty different characters in as many minutes, and their success is immediate.

Mlle. de Dio has idealised the serpentine dance, and the beauty of her ethereal appearances as a gigantic butterfly with iridescent wings is much enhanced by charming scenery. As "She," she introduces the wonderful effects of up-leaping flames and smouldering drapery without the slightest danger, and her turn is as interesting an exhibition of the illusions possible to the modern stage mechanician as it is possible to see. Coram, the ventriloquist, has returned from a successful engagement in America to amuse Palace audiences with his ventriloquial farce, in which the figure declares that he does most of the show, and threatens to strike. Lawson and Namon combine ball-punching with trick cycling and comedy; Jennie Johns has a military impersonation that is successful; Hanvarr and Lee appear successfully as "the golfer and the maid," the former being a clever club juggler and the latter a dainty acrobat; Nipper Lupino Lane asserts the principle of heredity with success in song and dance; and Billy French opens the bill as a comedian.

THE BEDFORD.

In a programme of much merit it is somewhat difficult to state which was the most popular turn, but we think the honours fall to Mr. John L. Shine, who was accorded a most enthusiastic reception for his really clever comedy-sketch, An Actor's Art. We all know Mr. John Shine as a most sterling actor, but he now adds to his reputation of being that of a quick-change actor, for in this sketch he portrays half a dozen characters, each of which is a very clever study. The other characters are neatly played by Miss B. Colmer, and Mr. W. E. Shine, Mr. Eric Albury, and Mr. R. Purdon. Tom Leo, who calls himself the "lazy comedian," is decidedly quaint, and his song of the man who is too lazy to die soon caught on, and when he finally held up the words of the chorus, which he said he was too tired to sing, the gallery boys obliged in great form, while the sleepy one is carried off the stage by two attendants. Helen Macgregor, a Scottish contralto, who wears the Highland costume, finds much favour by her fine rendering of two of the national songs. She has a good voice, which she uses to every advantage. A very entertaining turn is given by the Four Heames, who are neat and finished acrobats; the two comedians of the troupe are most entertaining, and cause roars of laughter by their really comic antics. That clever combination, the Six Brothers Luck, are also a very popular number with their well-known knockabout pantomime, The Demon of the Cellar. It goes as well as ever, and keeps the merriment at a high pitch throughout. The whole thing is smartly done, and one has to keep a very keen watch not to miss anything. An extra turn is given by a couple of cross-talk comedians and dancers, who introduce some original business and meet with much success; they would do well, however, we think, to finish off with the dance instead of the extempore song business they now have. Still, they were a distinctly clever turn, and of more than ordinary merit. A particularly charming turn is that of the Three Dares. One of the young ladies plays a delightful harp solo, which is greatly appreciated, after which she is joined by two other young ladies, who play the banjo and sing and dance. It is pleasing to see a turn of this description meet with the splendid reception which it deserved. It is dainty in the extreme, and the artists are accomplished musicians. Ruffell's Bioscope is still a winning number here, and the present pictures of torpedo boats at work is most entertaining. A quartette of pretty girls is found in the Olympian Stars, who sing and dance in the most captivating manner and score a success with their bright show. Earlier in the evening Jack Channan, a vocalist, and those amusing patter merchants the Kimberley Boys, appear. Mr. Geo. R. Hatley ably conducts the orchestra, which contributes in no small measure to the enjoyment of the entertainment. Mr. A. F. Lovesey, the manager, is as courteous as ever, and, as usual, very busy in looking to the comfort of all comers.

THE SOUTH LONDON.

Business is apparently always brisk at this old-established and popular Surrey-side house, and for this the excellent entertainment provided is doubtless responsible, not a dull or mediocre turn finding a place in the current week's bill. A capital comic interlude is that supplied by Harry Lynn and company in their sketch, Dead to the World, in which the head of the combination repeats his ludicrous impersonation of a confirmed toper, a Mr. Peter Guzzle, who makes his appearance on the scene in the final stages of intoxication. The plan his wife hits on to cure him, if possible, of his craving for "Scotch," and its effect on the bewildered Guzzle, who eventually thinks he is really dead, creates much amusement; and Miss Minnie Dare and Miss L. Lynn ably assist their chief in the fun-making. Mr. Walter Stanley, the comedian of the bill, evokes plenty of laughter in his two humorous effusions, "It's an ill-wind" and "Whack-fol-the-diddle"; and Miss Dolly Golden is rewarded with a deal of applause for her smart and attractive dancing.

The Three Sisters Sprightly, a trio of clever girls, whose work is always interesting and original, first appear as enthusiastic lady golfers—an elderly spinster, her niece, and her maid. Their gambols on the green afford much amusement to the audience, their concluding dance being keenly enjoyed. They also impersonate three near neighbours of our old friend, "Mr. Hook"—a merry little Dutch girl and her two sisters; a novel and finished turn that deserved all the appreciation shown. Mr. Herbert Clifton, the mimic with the marvellous voice, submits some most enjoyable imitations of musical comedy favourites, Miss Gertie Millar singing "Keep off the grass" and Miss Maudi Darrell in a quaint Dutch song and dance from The Beauty of Bath being two excellent impressions. His concluding contribution is a burlesque imitation of Miss Camille Clifford in "The Gibson Girl," the make-up and walk being vastly amusing, and the gifted and entertaining mimic is enthusiastically recalled.

The Herald Comedy Four combine melody and mirth most successfully in their enjoyable interlude, the vocalisation of the two ladies being particularly praiseworthy; and Miss Ruby Helder, the "girl with a man's voice," was loudly cheered for her singing of "The old brigade," her really wonderful voice being heard with pleasure in another agreeable number. The dramatic sketch of the programme is The Gentleman Cracksman, admirably played by Mr. Edward Ferris's company, prominent parts being cleverly undertaken by Mr. Robert Minster and Miss Adie Boyne. Ruffell's always welcome Bioscope Exhibition, showing the latest pictures, concludes the entertainment. The courteous and astute manager here is Mr. William Payne, and the excellent orchestra is controlled most efficiently by Mr. Charles E. Howells.

THE CANTERBURY.

An undoubted attraction in Mr. Fred Miller's entertaining bill at the Canterbury is the sensational sketch, The Span of Life, a condensed version of Mr. Sutton Vane's well-known drama, familiar to all London and provincial playgoers. As presented by Mr. Arthur Carlton's excellent company, the many exciting situations with which the piece abounds have been keenly relished by south-side audiences, especially thrilling being the realisation of "the human bridge" by the clever Stebbing Troupe of acrobats. Across this living column the heroine and her child make their escape, and the incident naturally brings down the house, the occupants of which are in full sympathy with the tribulations of virtue.

Another much appreciated item is the scena, Life in the Slums, given by Will Vay's juveniles. A quartette of ragged urchins appear on the scene and indulge in much playful banter at the expense of a good-humoured policeman—a most grotesque member of the force, who largely adds to the merriment of the trifle. Eventually their witticisms make way for warbling, and a bright little girls wins much applause for her singing of "The Angel of my dreams," one of her companions rendering with much acceptance the popular number, "When the sunset turns the ocean's blue to gold." A gentleman in evening dress, strolling on, is accosted by one of the half-starved youngsters, who dies at his feet ere assistance is forthcoming, and the trifle concludes with a verse of "Playmates," sung by the troupe. The scena, which is a curious mixture of the pathetic and humorous, gave evident pleasure throughout. A distinctly droll interlude was that supplied by Anthony, billed as the "swankiest swanker of all the swanks." His turn is introduced by some most amusing cinematograph pictures depicting his arrival at the hall and dressing for his "show." When he gets to business he proves himself a decidedly neat and skilful conjurer, in spite of his "swank," not the least enjoyable feature of his refreshing turn being the laughter-compelling "patter," which he rattles off so easily. His "spoof" business with a felt hat borrowed from a gentleman in the audience was especially provocative of mirth, and his entertainment throughout greatly enjoyed.

No more entertaining duologue is to be encountered in the "halls" than Me and 'Er, the popular little coster-comedy—with a laugh in almost every line—so smartly exploited by Duncan and Godfrey, and its success is as pronounced as ever, the audience on the night of our visit according it a hearty welcome. Enthusiastic also was the reception given Mr. Thomas E. Finglass, the popular coon impersonator scoring heavily in his song "Idaho," in which he is assisted by a dusky damsel, who joins him in the concluding dance, his other tuneful contributions also pleasing greatly. Handsomely gowned, Miss Margaret Ashton was accorded a flattering reception for her singing of a spirited number, "When Tommy Atkins marries Dolly Grey"; her fine voice being also heard to advantage in her cultured rendering of "The Sweetest Flower in the Garden." Mr. Percy Farrimond, the "Lancashire singing collier," was loudly acclaimed for his rendering of two popular numbers; Miss Irene Meldon scored with an attractive and skilfully-executed dance; Mr. Charles Russell has a much-appreciated number in "The Gutter Hotel," a well-rendered descriptive song; Miss Maud Esmond contributed a tuneful song that won favour; and other most enjoyable items in the bill were given by the Three Kentucky Girls; Miss Hilda Jacobsen, Mr. George Bohee, and Ruffell's Imperial Bioscope.

HOLLOWAY EMPIRE.

A strong and diversified programme is that submitted here this week, and, in spite of the belated summer weather, business continues to be good. George Robey is at the top of the bill, and naturally his number was the signal for much applause. His first song, "Now laugh," suits his peculiar style exactly, and provides him with some excellent patter. His second, "What are you looking at me for?" is equally successful, and his imitation with the audience for laughing proved as amusing as ever. He had to concede another song, and gave "Good Queen Bess," in which we make acquaintance with some old incidents in history related in a somewhat unfamiliar manner. Altogether his turn was most enjoyable, and his reception enthusiastic. The other star turn is Mr. Fred Lindsay, the whip wonder. This is an act of distinct novelty and undoubted skill. Mr. Lindsay manipulates a whip with a thong 25ft. long in the most amazing manner. He flicks the ash off a cigar that is being smoked, cuts a whisky bottle in two, cuts a cigarette in half, extinguishes the light of a candle, and then cuts it in two; then lashes a girl's bare arm, and finally shows the value of such an instrument as a means of defence by taking a revolver out of a man's hand, and bringing him on his back. There was no lack of applause during the progress of his turn, and his success was immediate and complete. The Sisters Pine submit a comedy-sketch, Maggie's Day Out, the make-up of one of the duo being of the broadly-humorous type, the cross-talk is amusing, and the duet at the end proves them to be the possessors of good voices. The Mozarts present a sketch, Heinie, and conclude with a clever snow-shoe dance. Sinclair and Pan, actor-musicians, indulge in some cross-talk, and introduce a good medley of Irish airs, excellently sung. Miss Ethel Haydon displays a nice voice and attractive style in two ballads, both of which gained the appreciation of the audience. Rhoda Paul gives a somewhat ambitious turn, entitled The Schoolboy's Dream. In this, the dream of a lost public schoolboy is cleverly suggested. A policeman adds to the gaiety of the scena, and two songs, by Harry Dacre, one with a refrain sung in the gallery, are quite in this talented gentleman's most melodious vein. A very generous meed of applause greets the finale, Miss Paul taking a well-merited curtain. The Leonards, in a comedy act, Point Duty, make a hit. The gentleman is an amusing comedian, and is ably assisted by his partner, a smart concluding bringing the item to a close. Happy Tom Parker is a versatile and born comedian. His first song, "Stay in the same place, can't you?" is a capital song, and his second, a burlesque coon song, lends itself to a lot of clever fooling, his dancing in addition being particularly smart. Miss Maiée Weston, vocalist and dancer, is also in the programme; and the American Bioscope shows some interesting views of the great Victoria Falls and the Zambesi River. Mr. Russell's orchestra again renders invaluable assistance during the evening.

DUCHESS, BALHAM.

Although summer may at last be said to have fairly established itself, it does not as yet seem to have made any appreciable difference on the numbers that are twice nightly assembling at this popular hall, where a most interesting programme has been arranged for the current week. At the top of the bill are the Harmony Four, real funny fellows, who succeed in keeping the house in one long, continuous roar. The comedy merchant especially is a most originally humorous person, and the heartiest of laughter greets his many funny antics. C. St. John Denton and George Rowland's juveniles are paying a return visit here with their vocal and dancing scena, entitled The Punch and Judy Girl. These clever youngsters sing and dance with an abandon that would do credit to many of their seniors, and a more refined and entertaining turn could scarcely be wished for. Special mention should be made of little Marjorie Lawrence, an expert and graceful dancer.

Herbert Clifton, who is described in the programme as the man with the £1000 voice, is certainly blessed with exceptional powers as a vocalist, which he uses to the greatest advantage. This week he is giving imitations of several of our leading theatrical artists, including Miss Ruth Vincent in the popular number from Amasis, "Little princess look up," and Miss Maudi Darrell singing "Luti" from The Beauty of Bath. In response to an undeniable demand for an encore he gives Camille Clifford's song "Why do they call me a Gibson Girl," hitting off the peculiarities of the actress to a nicety. Tom Lloyd, who is paying one of his periodical visits to this hall, gives a couple of capital numbers, entitled "All that glitters is not gold" and "When the wintry winds are blowing," the latter number especially being very much to the liking of the house. Hallam and Stanton are playing a novel little sketch entitled The Broken Journey, from which they get the maximum of effect. My Fancy, the queen amongst sand dancers, has, judging by the applause that greets the signalling of her number, worked her way well into the hearts of the residents of this neighbourhood. Looking as though she has completely recovered from her recent indisposition, she dances in her very best manner, and the reception awaiting her could scarcely be more generous. George Newburn, the popular mimic, includes among his impersonations Mark Sheridan, George Lashwood in his famous "Latchkey" song, and Walter King. He has certainly studied this last comedian with a thoroughness that calls for specal mention, his imitation being most realistic. Webb and Bramton, operatic singers, have well-trained voices, and their rendering of "Whisper and I shall hear" is excellent. Sterling and Love's vocal and instrumental act does not seem to have lost any of its scoring ability; and a pleasant evening is brought to a conclusion by pictures on the Bioscope, the series depicting "His First Camera" being most funny. Mr. L. Westcott Hicks, the popular manager, continues to make many friends, and he is ably backed up by Mr. Arthur F. Vernall, his acting-manager.

EALING HIPPODROME.

Mr. Tom Costello—ever popular with Ealingites—tops the bill this week with three excellent numbers, and thoroughly deserves the applause which is showered upon him. He is very successful in his first and second songs, "The blue, blue, sea," and "My ten bob rise"; but is conspicuously so in his scena, Auld Lang Syne. Here we find him as a miner, who on New Year's eve is alone—a solitary wanderer. Visions of the old home arise as he sits by the smouldering embers of his camp fire. Around him is a picturesque grouping of the mine, forming with its cranks and wheels a veritable wilderness of solitude. Mr. Costello always instils an element of pathos into his work, and never with more success than in his latest novelty. Ruffell's Imperial Bioscope unfolds an over-interesting chain of novelties, and the possibilities of this class of entertainment appear well-night inexhaustible. The series of the "Baffled burglar," "The coiner," and the "Golden beetle" are especially attractive. Rita and Roma produce a dainty sketch, In Eastern Glades, in which the gentleman sings of his love for a certain Indian maid, who, meantime, flits about the stage under the beams of many-coloured lights. She certainly looks very captivating, and merits all the pretty verses her sweetheart addresses to her. A trip is then taken to Paris, and there the dusky maiden entangles her suitor even more hopelessly, capturing his heart entirely in the end by a contortionist display to which her graceful figure lends itself with excellent effect.

Miss Gladys Huxley comes here with the cachet of an assured popularity. This is not her first appearance by many, and her bright and sparkling personality makes her for ever welcome. With her accustomed entrain she carols of the dashing "Devil-may-care brigade," and her arch rendering of "Spooning" captures the admiration of all the "mere" men of the audience. Billy McClain and Co. claim to present in their great Southern scena, The Hottest Coon from Dixie. There are really three coons and three coonesses, and a veritable pot-pourri of song, dance, and mad frolic is presented. The ladies wear pretty dresses, the gentlemen are energetic, and the whole troupe works hard to obtain the approbation which is assured to them. Miss Gracie Langley, who appears early in the evening has two melodious numbers in "Come along, Maisie," and "Bonnie Dundee." Both are equally tuneful, and evoke the admiration of the house. Miss Langley concludes her turn by showing that she is an expert buck dancer. Mr. Fred Herbert has a capital topical number in "John Bull and Britannia," containing many witty references to Hammersmith Workhouse, the L.C.C. and living statuary, and Sir W. Treloar and the cripples. In all of these items the vocalist hits the nail of popular sentiment fairly on the head. Mr. Arthur Croxton, mimetic comedian, who "assists himself," and very neatly he does, is very clever in his running commentary on the titles of some modern songs. With a remarkable range of voice he is able to "give" the vagaries of a village concert with side-splitting effect. Mr. E. W. James has his hands full in looking after the comfort of his patrons, who find here one of the coolest and best-ventilated theatres in the suburbs.

MR. CARL HERTZ, the famous illusionist, who is now on the Kenilworth Castle en voyage to the Cape, writes that they are having a beautiful trip, and that the weather is lovely. He sends kinds regards to all friends.

Guild Meeting in Yorkshire.

THE Rev. T. Horne hopes to begin his contemplated series of meetings at the Yorkshire feasts and fairs at Dewsbury Wakes on Sunday (tomorrow), July 21. As at other places, there will be two meetings, in the afternoon at 3.30 for show-people only, and an open service of the Guild at 8 o'clock, to which the general public will be invited. Both gatherings will be on the fair-ground, and in Mr. E. Farrer's cinematograph show.

The Mitcham Conservators and the Showmen's Guild.

NEGOTIATIONS of a most promising character are taking place between these two bodies. The object of these pourparlers is to arrive at a modus vivendi by which (without prejudice to the rights of the parties concerned) the ensuing fair on Aug. 12 may be carried on. The suggested site—the Three Kings Common—being the locale of this year's fair, or, failing that, some other position acceptable for the purposes of the fair on the common lands. As the conservators will be holding their meeting to consider this proposal today (Saturday), we are not able to give our readers this week any more definite information than that, so far as the showmen are concerned, they are perfectly willing to conclude any amicable and honourable arrangement, so that the fair may be continued to the people of Mitcham and the business rights and privileges of showmen be conserved and maintained.

The Rousing of the People of Mitcham.

QUITE independent of the action of the Showmen's Guild, two other important public bodies are now engaged in defending the fair against the attack of the abolitionists. The People's Rights League, with its object, "To defend the rights of the many against the private interests of the few," is continuing to hold a public meeting in various parts of the district, especially upon the fair green, calling particular attention to the position of the charter fair at the present juncture as indicating the need for safeguarding the people's rights. The other society covers a much wider area, but is concerned in this division of the County of Surrey in protecting the rights and liberties of the working classes, and is known as the Metropolitan Workmen's Council. The president of this organisation, Mr. Wm. Clarke, at a recent gathering on Mitcham Common, said that a few "goody-goodies" in Mitcham were attempting with all their might to get the Home Secretary to abolish the ancient fair, which for generations has given enjoyment ot the Mitcham and surrounding districts. The Mitcham conservators were also trying to get the fair removed, but he trusted that Mr. Gladstone would not listen to a mere handful of fanatics, who saw nothing but wrong-doing in the light-hearted enjoyment of the people. Mitcham Fair had outlived every other fair in the metropolis, and why should it not remain as a link with the past, and an honoured heirloom to the inhabitants? He appealed to the residents to make a determined and stubborn resistance to the attempt at abolition. The fair must be preserved, and it was for the people of Mitcham to put their foot down. What a sin, concluded the speaker, it would be to abolish so ancient a fair, which had in turn been visited by Sir Robert Peel, Lord Beaconsfield, Mr. Gladstone, and other statesmen! A resolution was carried unanimously strongly protesting against the proposed abolition. Both these organisations are working hard, and it is a great satisfaction to the executive of the Showmen's Guild to have the co-operation of both these societies.

Mansfield Fair.

THIS picturesque, old-fashioned town, embosomed in merry Sherwood, is an ideal spot for a fair. This year's entertainments were almost entirely in the hands of enterprising local showmen. The magnificent electrical coliseums and cinematograph theatres (three in number) of Messrs. Twigdon, Proctor, and Holland, were the principal shows. A. Twigdon provided Venetian gondolas, H. Hall provided steam horses and shooting concerns; the other entertainers were George Neale, T. Waller, and W. Holmes. There were, of course, a number of local caterers and stall-holders.

Tong Street Feast, Bradford.

HARRY ASHINGTON'S cinematograph and marionette theatre was the principal show. The principal machines were Marshall's flying motors, Burgin's steam swings, and manual swings by Johnson, Riley, and Barker. The fun-makers and novelty-providers were Brookes, Burgess, Bassett, Blackburn, Blake, Barker, Burgin, Thomson, Townsend, Illingworth, Riley, Guthrie, Johnson, P. Jack and Uncle Edwin.

East Bierley Feast.

FOR the amusement of the villagers, Crampton provided galloping horses and swings, and Messrs Vanner, Cookshaw, and Seed provided throwing games, football frames, and gingerbread stalls.

Notes from Wales.

MR. HY. STUDT attended the Neath Abbey fête and gala on Thursday and Friday. The old ruins, which was open to visitors, was largely attended. Cokernuts, Emmas, swings, dancing, while not forgetting Mr. Studt's magnificent No. 1 machine, did a roaring trade. A noteworthy feature, which should not go unmentioned, was Mr. Studt's generous action in giving a benefit towards the Neath Abbey Church fund. His charitable actions towards all charitable institutions are well known in South Wales, and we all hope he may be long spared to continue his works.

Pinder's Royal Circus and Menagerie.

ON Saturday Pinder's Royal Circus and Menagerie paid a welcome return visit to Forfar, and at the evening performance the great tent was packed with a large and enthusiastic audience, who greatly enjoyed the fine programme placed before them. The fine exhibition on the high wire, the daring and graceful trapeze act, and the merry interludes of the clowns were much appreciated; as also was the smart tumbling and handbalancing of Goldfish and Spuds. A notable feature of the programme is the wonderful performance given by Capt. G. Pinder and his trained elephant and ponies, which is without doubt one of the most remarkable expositions of animal training ever seen in this country. The fine physique of the Captain and the dainty costume of Mme. G. Pinder, by whom he is assisted, caused much favourable comment, and at the conclusion of their act, they were greeted with a tremendous ovation. Next, but by no means least, came Mr. E. Pinder's sensational performance with group of trained lions, which quite held the audience spellbound. The Grand Chron, with delineation of "Curfew shall not ring to-night," brought the performance to a delightful termination.

Death of a Welsh Showman.

MR. JOHN JONES died at Llandilo, Carmarthen, on Monday, July 15. He was justly esteemed by his fellows on the Welsh round of fairs. His trade mark, "The Old Firm," became a household word amongst the Welsh people. Our sympathy is given to the bereaved widow and family.

Lord John Sanger's Circus.

THIS splendid hippodrome and circus is billed to visit Oxford at the end of next week, and will be located in the Archer's Meadow, White House-road.

The White City—Old Trafford.

THE return of the fine weather (or the commencemenut of this late summer) shows what a popular place of amusement this has become. There is always something fresh, and every part has been crowded each afternoon and evening. The famous band of H.M. Grenadier Guards plays in the grounds this week, and among the additions are Gilleno's circus and Mansfield's racing cycles (Seaden's patent).

Evesham.

AT Merstow Green, Evesham, we have had P. Collins's fun fair.

Astwood Bank.

AT Astwood Bank were Strickland's galloping horses and motor-cars, park swings, shooting saloons, cokernut sheets, striker, &c., and varieties by Messrs. Fletcher, Lewis, and Hemming.

Henley-in-Arden.

AT Henley-in-Arden are Shepherd's gallopers, and other numerous attractions.

At Headless Cross

Great Cherry Wakes, were T. Clarke's motor-cars and slipping the slip, Chipperfield's royal show of living pictures, and Clarke's shooting saloons, park swings, striker, and other fair-ground paraphernalia.

Burnley Fair.

WITH the first week in July the round of the great Lancashire and Yorkshire wakes, feasts, and fairs commences. This great cycle of pleasure fairs is so full of possibilities that the clever showman has got to consider, not where he may go, for the fairs are legion, but where it is best for him to go for the purpose of his summer harvest. The big Lancashire fairs commence with Burnley. They know about Burnley at seaside resorts like Blackpool, Morecambe, Douglas, and Southport, for this fair marks the beginning of the seaside big business. Despite the exodus to the seaside, there yet remain enormous crowds to enjoy the pleasure fair. The shows and entertainments were:—Captain Payne's royal bioscope; Councillor Ball's wonderland; Leo's platonic fantasy, "The Fairy Head"; Mrs. Birch's aquatic marvels; C. Relph's freak show; T. Wortley's model exhibition; W. Shaw's fine-art gallery; P. Collins's superb Panhard motors; J. Green's Gordon-Bennett motor track; Edmund Holland's Olympian motors; B. Mitchell's careering chanticleers; Mrs. Holden's ostrich farm; T. Holden's cruisers; W. H. East's three-abreast gallopers; W. Holmes's helter-skelter; W. Shaw's sky-scrapers; Shuttleworth's juvenile motors and swings; Seed's toy and fairing bazaars; and the photo booths of Barker and Royle. The shooting concerns were those of J. Sharpe, R. H. Williams, J. Starkie, N. Burrows, Mrs. Jewell, and Mrs. J. Cornwell. Amongst the providers of throwing games and varieties were—Messrs. T. Forshaw, T. Taylor, and Butterworth, with, of course, local and other caterers.

Hoyland Common.

FOR the feast, the principal novelties were provied by Messrs. Tuby and Sons, who exhibited their magnificent theatre of cinematography, their switchback motor track, steam horses, and shooting concerns, and with them were associated Houldsworth, with Alpine glissade; Fisher, with steam and manual swings; Pullen and Herring, with park swings; Shaw, Pullen, Wright, Fisher, Warren, and Calver, with shooting concerns; and throwing games and other varieties by Doubtfire, Burgin, Illinworth, Calver, Wright, Houldsworth, Moore, and other caterers.

Halstead, Essex.

THIS local fair and open-air carnival was well provided by Mr. Swales Forrest, who exhibited the Japanese airship, illuminated with hundreds of electric lamps, juvenile roundabouts, highfliers, and various throwing games. The other entertainers were G. Boldsworth, with football game and Emma sheets; T. Boldsworth, with bottle-smasher, dart frame, and Emma sheet; and James Sanders, with fine-art show, striking machine, and throwing games. The great free sight attraction provided by Mr. Forrest was Hermann, the monarch of the high rope, who went through his marvellous performance 60ft. above ground in mid-air without a net. A special feature of this sensational act was the love drama, Courtship on the High Rope, in which the rope-walker was ably assisted by Miss Evelyn, his expert assistant in the daring mid-air performances.

COUNCIL AND SHOWMAN.

FORBIDDEN SIGNBOARD REMOVED IN DEAD OF NIGHT.

The controversy over a signboard between Rhyl Urban Council and Mr. A. Cheetham, a showman, who is exhibiting at the Central Hall, Rhyl, assumed an amusing phase yesterday morning.

Mr. Cheetham had erected a projecting signboard without first having obtained the council's sanction, and they ordered him to take it down. As the command was not obeyed Mr. A. A. Goodall, the town surveyor, and four men proceeded to the Central Hall about two o'clock in the morning and took down the sign.

Mr. Cheetham, whose suspicions were aroused, arrived on the scene, and protested that they were committing an outrage on the laws of the country by carrying out such an act between sunset and sunrise.

A few hours later crowds were flocking into Market-street to view an immense poster, which Mr. Cheetham had substituted for the missing signboard, and which ran:—

IN MEMORIAM.

RHYL URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.

"MEN LOVED DARKNESS RATHER THAN LIGHT, BECAUSE THEIR DEEDS WERE EVIL."—John iii. 19.

This extraordinary counter-move on the part of Mr. Cheetham has intensified the interest in the controversy.

THE PROPOSED NEW RAILWAY RATES FOR SHOW VANS, &c.

We are permitted by the executive officers of the Roundabout Proprietors and Showmen's Union (acting for the Organised Showmen of the Empire) to see an advance copy of the circular now being considered by the railway companies.

It will be seen that the crisis is an acute one, and that unless the railway companies can meet the showmen in a reasonable and thoroughly business spirit there must be a great revolution in the business as regards transit of show goods.

RAILWAY RATES FOR SHOW VANS.

Gentlemen,—In furtherance of our deputation's meeting with you in London, on May 9 last, we beg to submit the following facts for your consideration:—

The proposed new rates are prohibitive, and we cannot afford to pay these excessive charges. They are also unfair in their action, as, take the case of twelve trucks being sent by rail and some of them weigh only 25cwt.; other trucks, if they only weigh 5lcwt., would be charged one penny per mile for the extra cwt., and no allowance made for those considerably under weight. We are of the opinion that one roundabout is one consignment and should be treated as such, as were we to take the course of equalising the weights when the vans arrived at the station there would be a deal of vexatious delay and loss of time.

If the companies insist on enacting these rates, they will compel us to adopt one of two alternatives.

One is to shorten the length of our journeys, which is not profitable from the railway's point of view.

The other is to purchase traction engines and travel by road, and even in the event of our adopting the former alternative, viz., shortening our journeys, this would also eventually mean purchasing traction engines, since there is no possible doubt that for journeys up to fifty miles traction engines are preferable from all points of view, as, in addition to the saving in carriage, there is the carting to and from the stations (often an expensive item), and in the time occupied by a rail journey in loading and unloading, transit and carting, a traction engine will often travel the whole distance and land the goods on the desired place, after which the engine is available for generating the electric current for lighting the roundabout. We would further point out that, if the companies insist in enforcing the new rates, even for a limited period of, say, six months, there is the probability of the traffic being altogether diverted from the railways, as, if we purchase traction engines, we shall be compelled to continue their use, as we cannot afford to dispense with them after being once purchased. It is also as well to state that traction engines are now sold on the hire-purchase system by all the different makers, and that they are practically earning their cost while being used.

The sixpence per mile has been in force for twenty-five years, and the traffic has been built up on that rate.

At that time roundabouts were intended principally for children, and consisted of only one or two loads, with usually two or three passengers travelling with them. These loads were attached to ordinary passenger trains.

Since then, although the rates have stood the same, the roundabouts are more than six times larger, now requiring a special train, being from ten to fourteen loads, with passengers travelling with them numbering from twelve to sixteen persons. This does not, however, represent the whole of the passengers travelling with a roundabout, as the workmen's wives, our agents, and others travel in advance to secure lodgings, attend to billing, horses, &c., therefore the number of passengers who travel in connection with a roundabout usually number about twenty-two and upwards.

Our request is for a rate of 6d. per mile per truck for five tons when a special train is ordered. This may look a sweeping reduction, but some railway companies are doing this on their own systems, and it has been found to work satisfactorily.

We would point out that we load and unload our own vehicles, only asking you for assistance in strapping and shunting; we prefer to do this, as our men are accustomed to it and it is part of their work. We also provide our own tarpaulins, our own lever sfor moving the vans, and everything necessary to enable us to deal rapidly with the loading and unloading of the traffic. These necessary accessories, including the vans for carrying the roundabouts, represent two-fifths of the total weight carried. The extra weight asked for would entail practically no extra cost to the companies, as it means merely the haulage from point to point, and could only mean a little extra coal. At least we presume this, for whilst not professing to understand the workings of a railway, we know that a traction engine, under ordinary conditions, will haul a roundabout a mile for 1cwt. of coal.

There need be no empty carriages or vehicles hauled, as the exact number are ordered, enabling the companies to provide exactly the number required. There is also the fact that our moving day is usually in the middle of the week, when, we understand, there is not the same demand for carriage trucks.

This is a creative traffic, and it is questionable if there is any other business that creates such an increase in the number of excursions and passenger traffic. Take Hull Fair, Nottingham Goose Fair, Birmingham Onion Fair, and scores of others. Tens of thousands of excursionists visit these places at fair time, and if there were no fairs there would be no excursions to these places.

As to how this traffic would pay the companies, take the smallest unit, one roundabout of, say, twelve loads. (At a fair you would probably put thirty loads on a special.) There would also be twelve to fourteen passengers (paying ordinary fare) travelling with the special; this would mean 7s. 2d. per mile, exclusive of eight or ten passengers who have gone in advance by ordinary train, and we have often journeys of from one to two hundred miles, and in some cases even more.

In conclusion, we would ask you to compare our traffic with the theatrical traffic. A theatrical company of twenty persons travels at three-quarter fare and two carriage trucks free. This is at the rate of 1s. 3d. per mile, and without doubt the loading and unloading of these two trucks means more work to the railway officials than a special train of roundabouts, because the men employed on the roundabouts are labourers accustomed to this particular class of work. Our traffic is not Sunday traffic, and against this 1s. 3d. per mile paid by the theatricals we should pay 2s. 8d. for the same privilege.

We do not ask for three-quarter fare, nor do we ask for trucks for nothing; we simply ask for a little latitude in the weights carried.

We trust, therefore, you will give this matter your favourable consideration, as we feel sure you would find it both a paying and increasing traffic if liberally dealt with.

For the British Roundabout Proprietors and Showmen's Union,
THOMAS HURST, Secretary.

THE PASSION FOR PAGEANTRY.

By the Rev. T. HORNE, Hon. Chaplain Showmen's Guild.

We are all of us showmen at heart: "We wish to show the mortal ken, the thoughts that burn at tip of pen." The pessimism of Calvin that afflicted Puritanism in the days of the Commonwealth, and still afflicts certain narrow sectarians, has taken generations to eradicate. This virus of the deadly dull, this drab daily discipline of human life, is still a power in certain corners of the land, but the revolt is spreading with irresistible force, and laughter and joy are again heard, and seen in human life. If it is true that the tragedies of the people are voiced in song, so it is equally true that the joy and pleasure of the people must be expressed by music, song, and dance. When tyrant necessity hushes the voice of the people and the fight for bread crushes out all joy of life and work, then it is that the brooding silence of deadly apathy or the biding forces of hidden discontent kill all that is best and brightest in the human soul. "The snarl of the brute in man kills laughter in the land."

The Penny-Wise-and-Pound-Foolish Principle.

Certain men, with pretensions to be authorities on sound problems, fear economic danger to society in the rapid growth of what they call "the lighter vein" of the people. They see danger to the growing life of the country in the appreciation of our palaces of pleasure and amusement that have arisen in every great centre of industry. These apostles of grabbing thrift say that our people should hoard their pennies and bank their shillings and invest their pounds in trading concerns that these good friends of the working world obligingly promote and float upon the parsimonic thrift of the people. These would-be financiers of other people's earnings never deprive themselves of any pleasure that is fashionable in the class to which they belong; it is the pleasure of "the other fellow" that comes under their lash. It is the workers who are the spend-thrifts, not the man who spends an ordinary worker's whole week's wage in some pleasure that his class favours and upholds.

Education the Eye-Opener.

Men, women, aye and children too, take their own view of life. Their educated mind answers to the spirit within them, and shouts aloud for more opportunity of fuller life. The people are bursting the narrow boundaries set up for them by their better (God save the mark), and the common life is no longer drab or grey, but burst out (God be praised) into purple patches. The people are no longer contented with toil and drudgery, of being "the hewers of wood and drawers of water" for their masters and pastors. No, the people ask for more breathing room, and more time wherein to breathe. They even demand, and obtain after hard battle, more time to play and better playing fields. Great thanks are due to the London County Council for giving a good lead to the country by providing entertainments in the open-air on their Heaths and Commons. They go back to the toil of to-morrow with fresher vigour of mind and body, because they have had holiday as well as Sabbath of necessary surcease from wearing work. In the realms of imagination, in "The land of make-belief," they for a time have become human again, and not machine-driven slaves. They willingly pay a tithe of their wage to the joy of life fund, and they are all the better men and women for "the self-denial ordinance." No, the heart of the people is sound and healthy. The people know what they want, and go straight for it. They want light and joy, music and song, parables in living pictures, processions and pageants. Hence the modern renaissance of communal shows. We dub them pageants, yet we stage them, and carry them out as "shows of the people, by the people, and for the people." The towns and cities that a decade or two ago treated the travelling showman or actor as a rogue and a vagabond now gladly welcome the expert ability and experience of both these erstwhile outcasts, to make their municipal shows an artistic and commercial success. The showman welcomes this better mind of the leaders of the people (he has always had the people with him), and he throws himself with his whole heart into the prevailing passion for pageantry. It is his art, it is his craft, it is his business, it is his very life and being.

Is It Revival? Is It Renaissance?

Yes; it is both of these, but it is more, vastly more. It is the poetry, the music, the forceful joys of life seeking expression and outlet in voice and action. The mediæval guild and stagecraft were primarily the instruments of the Church, to inculcate Christian ideals of life. Hence the quaint term, "morality plays." On the purely human side of their work the mediæval guild stood for industrial freedom and the betterment of the life of the workers. All the necessary expressions of human thought, human life, have their considered place in the modern pageant, and they make their appeal to us for these reasons. Good, very good as the revival—the renaissance—of these things is, that is really not all the value of the modern pageant. In those simpler and slower days of the middle ages, when the pulse of the ages was sluggish and slow, the life of the people was a well-ordered blend of work and pleasure. The nation then had a code of social obligation. The Church Calendar regulated labour conditions, feast and fast, Holyday meant holiday, and the common people fully shared in the common life with their betters. When the Parish or the Abbey ceased to be the pivot and centre of the life of the commune, then selfish greed of possession took hold of the classes, and the masses were yoked to a life of toil. That hard and bitter past has its lesson for to-day.

The Revolt of the Transcendentals.

In a very real sense the travelling minstrel, the mummer, and the showmen were Bohemians. Like the wandering gipsy, the itinerant poet, player, and showman refused to settle down in any fixed habitation, or to comply with the so-called immutable laws of political economy. He therefore became "the landless man" of the dark ages of Puritanism, "the rogue and the vagabond" who tramped the highways and byways of the land as a nomad of the road, gipsy-like, in that he claimed his freedom of life and soul, and would not be degraded into being a mere unit in the machinery of industrial life. A transcendental in very truth, for he refused to give over his life to the getting of another man's wealth. Things material were to him valuable only so long as they conspired to express things spiritual, and so the travelling showman was the prophet of "other-worldliness"—the itinerant preacher of the gospel of life and joy and things that do not depend upon material wealth or worldly power for their highest and best expression. He was the apostle of the Higher Thought and the Simple Life, a transcendentalist before metaphysics invented the term or had attempted to fix its approximate meaning.

The Church and the Revival of Pageantry.

Canon Newbolt, the learned divine of St. Paul's Cathedral, in a recent sermon on "The Spirituality of Pageants," thus expresses the connection of the Church with the communal shows and pageants that are now becoming so prevalent in the land:—

"A pageant engenders (for so is the happy aim of him who invented it) a marvellous feeling of union among all who take part in it or in any way try to work for it. Happy and delightful altogether in itself—as I know and you will soon likewise know—not its smallest happiness consists in this—that it binds all men together, draws away all class distinctions; nay, more, can even obliterate (for a while, if not for ever) that sense of separation which comes amongst Christ's people because they will fix their gaze on the things that matter less, to the neglect and disregard of the things that matter more. Is it not true there will always be divergent types of believers? Human nature goes bail for it. My own inherited faith, as a member of the Church of England, is dear beyond words to me; and so is yours to you; and so is the other faith of others to them. There is nothing, I believe, to be gained by minimising—it is neither practical nor sensible to attempt to do such a thing—our real disagreements, real because they correspond to inborn differences. I suppose St. Paul himself, in his human heart, would have wished that Cephas, or James, or John might have seen "eye to eye" with him on every point. But they couldn't; he knew they couldn't. So he fixed his steady gaze on a truth that wholly transcends all surface divergencies. 'One body,' cried he, 'and one spirit'—and in the delight of a pageant we can, all of us, meet as 'one.' Free Churchman and High Churchman, man of 'Broad' views or of 'Low,' what matters it when we meet, for the glory of our birthplace, to commemorate its past, and prognosticate its future—for a wise man it was who said 'you cannot have a future until you have had a past'—on the ample, free greensward?

The Fellowship of Pageantry.

"Believe me that I envy you, you happy people of Bury, for this singular sense of fellowship, each with each—the rich with the poor, the man who clings to the past with the man who lives for the future, you are going to 'revel in' during the next few glorious days. From now the golden memory of this astonishing week will tinge all your relations with your neighbours and fellow-townsmen. How can you quarrel, my friends, or bicker, or use hard words when you are haunted by the memory of this very carnival of whole-hearted, loyal brotherhood—this true-love festival? Believe me, you will find it passing hard. The spirit of these days will cast an abiding glamour over all your dealings together, and all Bury's bygone worthies will seem to rejoice with you, because you are made 'one' (by the spell of pageantry) in neighbourly communion.

"But chiefest, and best of all—and I know you will bear with me if I seem to be urgent here—but chiefest and best of all, a pageant that is a pageant—such a pageant as I know, and you have in execution—is touched and permeated with a sense of real contact with 'our Father.' For if it be not indeed an act of corporate thanksgiving, then it is nothing at all. It is well to be one with the past; it is well to be one in ourselves; but both these 'unities' depend on the larger 'unity'—the sense of the oneness with God. You know (who does not know?) that sometimes the wider perception of the 'overshadowing arms' and the 'all-providing love' becomes feeble, and dim, and faint. And then our lives go awry! But at others we are possessed with the sense of our Father's nearness. And this historic festival, which focuses every instinct of patriotic thankfulness to God for His infinite goodness to Bury and all her sons for age on age, will help you to realise, with an intensity of assurance not always possible, that the God of all your forbears, the God in Whose Name they worked and fought—fought and, if need be, died—is your God still. Fellow-feeling, righteous pride, heart-felt thanksgiving—these form the threefold notes of a veritable 'pageant.' And our pride in a glorious past, our sense of a happy present, highly favoured, truly neighbourly, must find their proper crown and seemly consummation in the joyous readiness of true thanksgiving."

The Co-ordination of Spiritual Forces.

It is thus becoming universally acknowledged that the art of the actor, the art of the painter, the art of the poet, the art of the showman (in its widest sense and interpretation) are valuable spiritual forces, touching the very heart and life of the people. This is the lesson that the commercial man of to-day has to learn, that his business, whether in the manufacture of goods or the distribution of the same in the markets of the world, is all the better, all the sweeter, and all the truer to the real purposes of trade and commerce when both he and his workpeople have rest, refreshment, and recreation by the way. That the journey of life progresses all the smoother and the complexities and inter-relations of society express themselves all the fuller when poetry of voice or motion, when tragedy or comedy, or that ennobling blend of all these forces for God and for good, have free course (without let or hindrance) in this world, here and now, in which "we live and move and have our being."

OLD MITCHAM FAIR.

PROTEST AGAINST ABOLITION.

Under the auspices of the Streatham branch of the Metropolitan Workmen's Council, a crowded meeting of local residents was held on Mitcham Common on Sunday evening last to protest against the proposed abolition of old Mitcham Fair.

Mr. Walter Feldon, the branch chairman, presided, and said that he had not yet received an answer from Mr. Gladstone in reply to a memorial sent to the Home Office by his council. It was for the people of Mitcham to say if the ancient fair which had visited the town for generations was to be abolished. The fair, which came for three days once a year, was a great benefit to local shopkeepers, and it gave enjoyment to the children of the district. It provided honest amusement for the grown-ups, and to have it abolished would be nothing less than a public scandal. (Hear, hear.) It was an honoured fair, said the speaker, as such statesmen as Sir Robert Peel, Lord Salisbury, Mr. Gladstone, Lord Beaconsfield, Mr. Balfour, and Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman had in their time visited it, and if the people of Mitcham and the district wanted it continued they must meet the abolitionists with a determined and stubborn resistance. (A Voice: "We will." Cheers.) The fair must be preserved, and to bring that about the residents must unite, said Mr. Feldon, and let a mere handful of goody-goodies see that the old historic fair should remain. (Cheers.)

A resolution was unanimously passed calling upon the Home Secretary not to abolish the ancient fair, and a copy of the resolution to be sent to the Home Office.

LORD JOHN SANGER AND SONS' Hippodrome and Menagerie visited Shrewsbury on Monday last, and after a smart and interesting midday parade gave two capital shows. The varied and attractive programme included a capital turn by Zampo and Clown, Coleman and company's interesting elephant and horse tableaux act; a clever turn on the wire by La Belle Fondants, with the able assistance of Comical Pimpo; the Maro troupe of fearless and graceful equestrians; an amusing turn by the splendidly trained elephants; a daring and skilful performance of the Airlees; Hoffmann's finely trained pony; ancient sports; Pimpo's leaping dogs; Miss Lina's beautiful horse Hawcombe, and the ever popular "Turpin's Ride to York."

FILM GOSSIP.

Charles Urban Trading Co., Ltd.

THIS company are publishing a particularly interesting series of pictures illustrative of Mr. Carl Hagenbeck's famous wild animal park at Stellingen, Germany. As everybody knows, Mr. Hagenbeck is the world's principal importer of wild animals, and by his assistance the Urban Company was recently given every facility for obtaining photographs of the animals in thorough enjoyment of their semi-freedom, in appropriate environment of park, lake, dell, cave, rocky fastness, and ravine.

As may be imagined, the operators' task was, under these conditions of wild animal freedom, not altogether enviable, the highly-successful results necessitating close proximity to the various beasts photographed. This was accomplished, however, without mishap, though at the cost of some expenditure of nervous energy when the creatures evinced a morbid curiosity about, and showed great interest in, the manipulation of the cameras. These pictures will be exhibited for the first time at the Alhambra on Monday.

Mr. Seymour Hicks as an Editor.

Great humour is combined with undoubted general interest and value in this unique industrial series, also an Urban production, owing to the fact that Mr. Seymour Hicks poses in the introductory and final episodes as the editor for one day of the Tatler. The inimitable actor-manager is seen at his best in the editorial sanctum. His burlesque of the dignity, worry, and anxiety in the earlier stages, and his satisfaction, when the complete edition is placed in his hands, are quaint and mirth-provoking in the extreme. The actual production of the paper, however, full of genuine instruction and technical interest, is presented with wonderful and enlightening effect. The picture illustrating operations in the composing-room, the monster presses working with mechanical precision, their insatiable appetites fed with virgin sheets, which are as rapidly thrown off in printed form on the other side; the folding, stitching, and binding by machine, counting into quires, inserting double-page illustrations, and the publication and despatch of the journal are an education in themselves.

"The Haunted Bedroom" is a comical trick film, wherein an ordinary bedroom and an ordinary man are made subjects of extraordinary animated nightmare. Candles and candlesticks progress without human agency; a ghost arises and vanishes, leaving in its place a pretty chambermaid bearing soothing drinks. Bottles empty themselves after the manner of syphons; gas brackets emit liquids; clothes perambulate without wearers; pyjamas become animated; human bodies dismember themselves, the parts act independently and rejoin. Furniture goes mad and careers about the room. The very room itself shares in the general whirling orgie of mad humour. Finally, order is restored as mysteriously as previous disorder arose.

Pathé Frères.

"The Smoking Chimney," issued by Pathé Frères, should prove a very popular number. A servant is seen using the bellows rather too vigorously upon a smouldering fire, and the result is that smoke issues in great volume from the chimney, which is just outside the windows of the studio belonging to two artists. They promptly stuff the mouth of the chimney so that the smoke is forced back into the drawing-room. General consternation is caused. Chimney-sweepers and firemen are sent for, and the film concludes with a rough and tumble on the roof with the hose playing on artists and everybody.

"The Express Sculptor" is a reproduction in animated photography by the same firm of a clever music hall artist moulding, with lightning rapidity, caricatures of men and women. The illustrations in this case are wonderfully clear and distinct, and the series should find considerable favour.

Vitagraph Co.

A really beautiful set which tells a story of absorbing interest is "The Bandits." In one of the most rugged and picturesque ravines of Southern Italy a lonely sentinel stands on a rocky eminence keenly scanning the valley beneath. He is a Sicilian bandit, and suddenly far below he sees a handsome carriage drawn by four horses, driven by postillions and carrying a lady and gentleman, evidently foreigners of wealth. The sentinel disappears and in a moment we see the interior of the bandits' cave. The leader hastily summons his men, and we follow them down a steep and winding declivity to a spot near the roadway, where they scatter and form an ambush. The scene changes to the opposite side of the ravine. Two American tourists are enoying the beautiful scenery, examining distant points through their field-glasses. One of them sees the carriage before mentioned, and he points it out to his companion. By a novel arrangement of panoramic effects, the audience is permitted to look through the field-glass and see all that transpires. We see the bandits stealthily closing around the carriage—then the attack, the abduction of the lady and the—but then for a moment we see no more, for the glasses are dashed to the ground and the two tourists are running like mad to the rescue, leaping over rocks and crags, straining every nerve to arrive before it is too late. Back to the scene of conflict we go—the husband is making a vigorous fight but is being overpowered by numbers; the lady is struggling in the brutal hands of her captors, when suddenly the two Americans burst upon the scene, take the bandits by surprise, and after a fierce hand-to-hand conflict put them to rout and save the day.

Ruffell's.

THE output of the new projector produced by this firm, to which we recently referred, is rapidly on the increase, and Ruffell's are discarding all the other models on their shelves in favour of the fresh patent.

"LOST IN THE ALPS" is a picture with which Ruffell's are making great headway. It shows a child carrying her father's dinner, and she gets caught in a snowstorm, but is rescued by a couple of St. Bernard dogs. The scenes, in green tint, have a very pretty aspect.

MESSRS. W. BUTCHER AND SONS, LTD., of Camera House, Farringdon-avenue, E.C., have greatly extended their cinematograph department, and are now in a position to supply any requisite necessary to the cinematograph exhibitors in general. The film hiring department has been brought thoroughly up to date, and their catalogue contains the best and latest films. They are also showing some new models of projectors, which they will be pleased to demonstrate to friends, both old and new, if they will give them a call at Camera House.

MR. WILLIE BENN produced at the Empire, Camberwell, on Monday, a pretty sketch, entitled Dolly's Birthday. Miss Elsie Forster as Dolly made an enormous hit. The little sketch was received with unanimous applause.

WE are glad to hear that My Fancy has recovered from her recent illness, and is dancing as brilliantly and as neatly as ever at the Duchess, Balham, where her turn is heartily acclaimed.

MR. JOSEPH WRIGHT'S TREAT TO THE SHOWMEN'S CHILDREN.

In staid Scotland, and in its commercial capital, too, when all the people are supposed to be out of town enjoying the annual fair holidays at coast or country, a unique gathering takes place on the Sunday afternoon of the fair, in the vicinity of the shows, Mr. Joseph Wright (the friend of the showmen's children, and of all Bohemians, for that matter) holds his annual reception, to which he invites all the children of the menagerie, the circus, the ghost show, the gipsy tent, the shooting alley, and all the children of those who come within the gates of St. Mungo's city to amuse the citizens at the fair. The function is one which is looked forward to with no little expectancy by the showmen and showwomen of the future. It is the only function of its kind in the world, and has attained to much importance. Not only do the young nomads look forward to it, but hundreds of the citizens think themselves highly honoured if they receive tickets for the reserved seats from Mr. Wright to share in the festivities. On Sunday last the area of the Camlachie Institute was crowded with the fair-haired little English Saxons and the dark-haired, olive-complexioned gipsies of the Boswell and Lovell tribes. When the little guests, with their bronzed faces peeping from beneath large picture hats, were seated at the well-filled tables, with their snow-white cloths, they looked most picturesque. The reserved seats for Mr. and Mrs. Wright's personal friends were filled with several hundreds of ladies and gentlemen in summer attire, giving the whole assembly a bright and garden-party appearance. The gallery was set apart for those of the public who wished to witness the proceedings, and it was also crowded to its utmost capacity. Before tea was served to the children and friends, Mr. Wright asked the blessing, and the young people repeated grace, sentence by sentence. Some of the expressions were touching in their simplicity. "Our Father, be with us while we are in Glasgow, be with us when we leave this city, be with us always in our 'living waggons,' in city, in town, or on lonely heath. Bless our fathers and mothers, our sisters and brothers, and all those who love us, and all who are good to us. Bless the food before us to our use, for Jesus' sake."

Mr. Wright was accompanied to the platform by Mrs. Wright, Rev. Mr. Taylor (Clydebank) and Mrs. Taylor, Rev. Mr. Burleigh (Blantyre), Mr. Robert Risk (superintendent of the Slum Mission), Mr. Daniel Graham, Mr. Paterson (the well-known purser of the Columba) and Mrs. Paterson, Mr. Stewart, Mr. Palethorpe, Miss Ferrie, and a host of friends.

After a substantial tea, Mr. Wright gave an address of welcome, advising the young people to trust in God and do the right, to cultivate self-respect, and to remember that they were of more value than many sparrows, and that God was ever watching over them, and was interested in their joys and sorrows. The address was received with great applause. Several other gentlemen delivered short addresses, and there were songs and solos between. Robert Norton, who is a Glasgow singer of much refinement, sang with great taste and feeling "There is a green hill far away" and "Lead, kindly light." Miss McMinn and Miss Burns also rendered appropriate sacred songs. A special hymn, written by Mr. Wright many years ago, which is a great favourite with the show-people all the world over, entitled "The traveller's friend," was sung to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne" by Misses McMinn and Burns and Mr. Robert Norton, Mr. Wright playing the accompaniment on the English concertina. The whole audience joined in the chorus at the end of each verse.

"THE TRAVELLER'S FRIEND."

He went about from place to place—
Our Saviour had no home;
He slept in boats, or on the hills,
Wherever He might roam.

Chorus:
He is the Friend of travellers,
And knows them young and old;
He wishes that they all might come
Into His blessed fold.

The foxes had their hiding-place,
Where they their young ones fed;
But Jesus had not anywhere
To lay His weary head.

What though we roam from place to place,
The Saviour is our Friend;
He is our constant Comforter,
His kindness knows no end.

Though friends forsake, though strangers frown,
We have a friend in Thee,
Who guides our steps continually,
Wherever we may be.

Where'er we go this Friend is near,
To guard, direct, and guide;
Although unseen, He ever will
By His own friends abide.

"Ye're a' welcome hame," Mr. Wright's well-known Scottish hymn, set to the tune of "The auld hoose," was sung by Miss McMinn, Mr. Wright in this instance also playing the accompaniment on the English concertina. Mr. James Patrick, one of Glasgow's well-known organists, presided at the harmonium with much acceptance. At the close of the interesting proceedings each child was presented with a bag of sweets, and the whole audience were presented with a photograph of Mr. Wright as a souvenir of the occasion. Thus ended the most successful gathering of the kind that has ever taken place. If the popularity of this bright gathering increases, larger accommodation will most certainly be required, as the Camlachie Institute was taxed to its utmost capacity.

A WEDDING in which the music-publishing world was greatly interested took place on Sunday morning, the 7th inst., at St. Giles's Church, Camberwell, the Rev. Mr. Fisher officiating, when Mr. Arthur Preston, a leading official of the Music Publishers' Association, was united to Miss Rose Bull, of the Chandos Hotel, Sheffield, from which town came a large number of friends of the bride specially to be present at the ceremony.

FULLY 500 people were assembled at the church when the wedding party arrived, which it did in Renault cars supplied by the General Motor-car Co., of Brixton. Mr. Frank Mabe, of the Music Publishers' Association, was best man, and the bridesmaids were Miss Ethel Alletson (Sheffield), Miss Daisy Preston, and Miss Beatrice Boulton.

ON the return of the party to the residence of the bridegroom, Abbeydale House, Talfourd-road, Peckham, photographs were taken of the wedding group by J. Hermann, of Church-street, Camberwell, and over a hundred guests were in evidence at the breakfast and reception, representatives from all the leading publishers attending, and speeches being made by Messrs. George and Percy Preston, Alfred Wyatt, Hedge, Fred Spooner, Robert Keddell, Gearing, Frank Mabe, and the bridegroom, who is known to all his friends as "Willie" and to every music pirate as "Arthur Preston, the Sleuth." Mr. and Mrs. Preston subsequently left for Bournemouth for the honeymoon. Amongst the donors—besides relatives and intimate friends—of costly presents were Messrs. Boosey and Co., Messrs. Chappell and Co., Ltd., Messrs. Francis, Day, and Hunter, Mr. H. Percy Becher (solicitor), the Music Publishers' Association, and Messrs. Phillips and Page.

SHOWMEN OF TO-DAY.

MR. ARTHUR DASHWOOD.

AGENT IN ADVANCE.

As a rule, nothing is heard of the advertising manager who goes in front of big shows like Bostock and Wombwell's preparing the way for them. The performers get all the applause when the show arrives, but it is the advance agent who really makes the show a success. There you see him in the cities, villages, and towns of the Empire rushing around with scarcely a minute to spare, telegraphing here, telephoning there, interviewing public men, newspaper editors, superintendents of police, tradesmen, billposters, &c., and then—passing on to the next town to go through the same process again. The advance agent has got to make the show talked of, to make people look forward to it; in fact, it is his duty to "boom the show" to the best of his ability.

One can quite understand that the successful advertising manager must be a man of resource, of originality, of smart appearance, and of good address. In Mr. Arthur Dashwood all these attributes will be found. He is undoubtedly one of the smartest advance agents on the road. He is, moreover, one of the breeziest, good-natured, and entertaining of men, yet withal the most diffident and unassuming. This is shown by the fact that for over eight months we have been bombarding him by letter to get the material for this sketch of his life and work.

Born at Birmingham fifty-eight years ago, the son of a Royal Navy captain and the nephew of a famous actress of those days (Miss Evelyn Courtenay), the love of adventure and the artistic spirit were hereditary gifts. Although educated for the stage and gifted with considerable talent, the love of adventure prevailed. He joined the 10th Hussars as bugler.

Being a good comic singer, it was not long before he established himself as a favourite with the men of the regiment. His fame as an entertainer soon reached the ears of the colonel of the regiment (Colonel Baker), who requisitioned his services once a week at the officers' mess.

In the year 1878 His Majesty King Edward—then the Prince of Wales—went out to India tiger shooting, and Mr. Dashwood was selected as one of the thirty men of the regiment who accompanied His Royal Highness as a bodyguard. Needless to relate, he witnessed several exciting scenes and incidents during his Indian tour.

Returning home after the expiry of his time of service in the Army, he became assistant stage-manager to Mr. George Rignold in that famous actor's American tour of Henry VIII. It was whilst in the United States that he turned to the world of shows, and took to the road as advance agent for Tony Pastor.

From Tony Pastor's shows to the great Barnum's show was but the natural preferment, and for two years he handled Barnum's monster attractions, and then, feeling the strain beginning to tell, he turned his face homewards once more, and took a brief breathing space in Birmingham, his native city.

Next we find him running the celebrated and world-renowned pugilist, Jem Mace, with his boxing company, through the United States, India, and Australia, and back again to the States.

This great tour over, Mr. Dashwood returned to England, and settled down at Swansea as manager of Fletcher's Palace of Varieties. This was about twenty-six years ago, and it may be mentioned, as an instance of Mr. Dashwood's many-sidedness, that he helped Mr. Fletcher in the digging of the foundation of this palace, his employer and himself working with the carpenters and bricklayers as if to the manner born.

As general manager, Mr. Dashwood engaged all the big stars of those days for Swansea. Old Swansea music-hall lovers will remember their names—Harry Rickards, Jenny Hill, Fred Coyne, Fred Albert, Frank Egerton, Jack Kavanagh, Fred Archer, &c., &c. From three to four years Swansea claimed our genial old friend for her own, and many Swanseaites will probably remember him sitting in the chair in evening dress and "rapping" the various artists in with a small wooden mallet. Then came another "call from the wild," and Arthur Dashwood threw over the trammels of a settled life, and became a wandering showman once more.

We next come across him as agent-in-advance for Keeley and Patterson's Circus in Ireland. Subsequently he adopted a new rôle—he became his own proprietor, and ran two big variety shows through Ireland as Dr. Dashwood. The "Doctor" was a "broth of a bhoy," and having, like "Father O'Flynn," a "wonderful way with him," he gained a warm corner in the hearts of the Irish amusement-going public, and his popularity in the Emerald Isle was solid and far-reaching. It was Arthur Dashwood who brought the great Peter Maher into the front rank as the champion boxer in Ireland. It was Arthur Dashwood who "ran" J. L. Sullivan and "took" Peter Jackson through Ireland.

Subsequently we hear of Mr. Arthur Dashwood as agent-in-advance for Mr. E. H. Bostock's Royal No. 1 Show. Mr. Bostock is the proprietor of the Glasgow Zoo, and the No. 1 Show, under the paternal care of Mr. Dashwood, toured England, Scotland, and Wales.

This tour took about four years, and then Mr. Dashwood ran on in advance of No. 2 Show, which toured Ireland and came back again to England.

No. 2 Show was booked for the Continent, but as Mr. Dashwood was not able to "parley voo" he resigned his position under the firm, and went on as agent-in-advance of Sedgwick's Menagerie, which had a successful tour for a season in South Wales.

When the Fun City was established for a eight weeks' season at the Olympia in London, the International World's Fair Co. showed their acumen by enlisting the services of Arthur Dashwood, Esq., F.O.S., and the season was a big success.

Now Mr. Dashwood is piloting Mr. E. H. Bostock's No. 1 Royal Menagerie through Great Britain again.

Mr. Dashwood has seen all the sights worth seeing in the world, from the great falls of Niagara to the ponderous Pyramids and mystic Sphinx. He is a Freemason and Buffalo. He is a clever shot, and holds the ex-championship as a pigeon shot, beating all records by killing twenty-three birds out of twenty-four on May 18, 1891, at the Grand Central Park, Sydney.

He is a married man, and his charming wife will be remembered as Miss Lucy Lucas on the variety stage. One of his sisters is Miss Kitty Wright (wife of Mr. Louis Lavater, of Dog orchestra fame).

Recently at the Olympia he was presented with a handsome gold medal as a token of esteem by the showmen of Great Britain.

Mr. Dashwood's globe-trotting has "blown all the cobwebs off," and he take a wide, healthy, breezy, and tolerant view of life. He has a good word for everybody, and everybody has a good word for him. That he may live to a good, ripe, old age is the wish of a multitude of friends and admirers.

The domestic episode, His Birthday, as presented by Mr. and Mrs. Royston-Dene and company, is remarkable for a fine display of feeling and strong emotion, which is entirely due to the very simplicity of the story, which is really its

RE APPLICATIONS FOR ENGAGEMENTS

All applications by either Artists or their Agents must be made to the Head Office.

Lowest terms must be stated, and distinction made between salaries required for larger and smaller towns.

Vacant dates should be stated. If a list of existing bookings be sent, it will render selection easier.

Artists employing Agents should accredit one only at one time, as the friction arising when several Agents are employed at the same time, all expecting the one booking to go through each of them, often renders it expedient to avoid that booking altogether rather than give undeserved offence to several Agents.

New Acts seeking Engagements, or turns not rebooked (possibly because they have played a series of dates without introducing new business), will facilitate matters by having their acts seen by our District Managers. Their Districts and Postal Addresses are as follow:—

EDINBURGH, GLASGOW, NEWCASTLE, AND DISTRICT.
MR. S. GETHING,
Empire Theatre, Glasgow.

LEEDS, SHEFFIELD, HULL, BRADFORD, AND DISTRICT.
MR. T. GERALD MORTON,

MR. WILLIAM COLLINS,

N.B.—Mr. OSWALD STOLL or Mr. FRANK ALLEN can be seen by appointment on all matters arising out of the above, and for the discussion of entirely new Numbers.

All Artists or Agents who communicate with our District Representatives must have made definite applications, in accordance with above directions, to the Head Office, at the same time, or just previously.

THIS WEEK'S NOVELTIES.

THE DIEPPE MOTOR CIRCUIT, 1907

Code Word, CONCOURS.

This film of the recent motor race at Dieppe is unsurpassed in quality and finish. Every incident that occurred is faithfully depicted. We have an excellent view where one of the cars is completely overturned, and a nasty catastrophe averted. Very thrilling, intensely exciting, and the only film of this race worth having. Now being exhibited nightly at the Palace Theatre, London.

857ft. The Subject, £14 5s. 8d.

SMOKING CHIMNEY.

Code Word, COKE.

This film depicts some artists who are painting in their studio, and are extremely annoyed by the fumes coming from a neighbouring chimney. They desire to stop same, so proceed to block up the exit with anything they can lay hands on. This idea meets with great success. The results of their caprice, as seen in the following pictures, when sweep, fire-engines, and all the other paraphernalia arrive on the scene, are excruciatingly funny.

314ft. The Subject, £5 4s. 8d.

THE HENLEY REGATTA.

This is an exceedingly good film of the Regatta at Henley, boats going to the post, the racing, a fine panoramic view of the river, and the finish of the several races. Quality and steadiness, as usual, are perfect.

362ft. The Subject, £6 0s. 8d.

LIVING SILHOUETTES.

Code Word, CAPELIN.

This is a charming illusion. Some of the effects are exceedingly well carried out. From an artist's portfolio we get the artist himself, limb by limb, until the figure is complete, and from his easel and canvas charming figures are produced. After many evolutions they disappear in a most extraordinary manner. A good film.

379ft. The Subject, £6 6s. 4d.

KNOWING DOGS.

Code Word, CLARANETTE.

This is a charming series of pictures, showing our canine friends going through all their several turns, such as hurdle jumping, rolling the ball and basket, etc. This is a very smart little film.

346ft. The Subject, £5 15s. 4d.

THE ENGLISHMAN IN THE HAREM.

Code Word, CLOCHES.

This film gives one an idea of what might possibly happen to the adventurous tourist on a visit to Constantinople, and being silly or careless enough to get into the precincts of the Sultan's household. No doubt it is very nice to try and see the veiled ladies, but the punishment meted out afterwards does not seem worth the risk; but in this instance the situations end up in a kind of "Morocco Bound" manner. Very laughable and good finale.

314 ft. The Subject, £5 4s. 8d.

THREE CHATTERBOXES.

Code Word, COLIMACON.

Women as a rule are termed proverbial chatterboxes, but we here see that such is not the case; three of the opposite sex are so taken up with conversation and arguments that no heed is paid either to passers by, places, or anything of the kind. Their arguments once started, nothing stops them—not even when the traffic seems likely to finish them off entirely. Short, but crisp.

165ft. The Subject, £2 15s.

THE BANDITS

or, An Adventure in Italy.

COPYRIGHT 1907 BY THE VITAGRAPH COMPANY OF AMERICA.

A New, Sensational Film of the Right Kind.

Two American tourists in Sunny Italy. In a rocky ravine they pause to admire the scenery. Through their field glasses we see (by a novel panoramic effect) a carriage approaching, drawn by four horses and containing a lady and a gentleman, also evidently tourists. Suddenly the peaceful scene changes to tragedy. The carriage is attacked by bandits. The two Americans to the rescue. Exciting hand-to-hand conflict. Bandits routed. Lady rescued. AMUSEMENTS IN SOUTH AFRICA

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

PIETERMARITZBURG, JUNE 25, 1907.—SCOTT'S THEATRE is occupied by the Wheelers' London Gaiety company in The Catch of the Season, The White Chrysanthemum, and The Dairymaids. The first-named was performed on Monday, and met with an enthusiastic reception. Mr. Frank Greene as the Duke of St. Jermyns makes good use of his fine voice; Mr. Arthur Lacely as Lord Dundreary keeps the audience in hilarity; Mr. Bert D'Arcy as William Gibson is well suited to the part; Bucket is ably portrayed by Tiny Tim; Mr. Alfred Lester as Otho Montague makes the part extremely amusing; Miss Trissie Marche does a pretty pas seul; Miss Mamie Brickwell as Angela Crystal scores a success. All the minor parts are in capable hands, and the staging and dresses are all that can be desired.

THE MASQUERADERS are giving nightly performances. The company consists of Misses Rosie Dick, Kate Tully, L.R.A.M., and Lizzie Gelding, and Messrs. Dan Munroe, Arthur Gould, and Billie Leopold. Mr. Yates Williams acts as stage-manager and accompanist. Dan Munroe is very amusing in all his turns, and causes rounds of laughter; Billie Leopold is exceedingly funny in vocal and acrobatic endeavours; Arthur Gould is the possessor of a fine baritone, which he uses ably. Miss Rosie Dick scores heavily in her songs, "Cheyanne" and "I've come in my bark canoe"; Miss Kate Tully, L.R.A.M., is a great success; Lizzie Gelding, dancer of the company, is an accomplished artist.

THE POT-POURRI ENTERTAINERS have just finished a season at the Central Music Hall. The company consists of the Misses Irene Hainott, Cissie Frampton, and Josie Shalders, and Messrs. De Vens and A. Rode, the latter being a local artist. Miss Irene Hainott (late of the Sass-Nelson American Co.) is the possessor of a fine cultured voice; Miss Josie Shalders makes a complete success; Miss Cissie Frampton is a very chic comedienne, and has made herself exceedingly popular; Mr. W. De Vens also does well. Mr. A. Rode is very eccentric and amusing.

STAGE STAFF GOSSIP.

THE annual outing of the staff of the Newcastle Empire took place on Sunday last in delightful weather. The party, which numbered 120, drove in brakes to Shotley Bridge, where a very pleasant day was passed. Dinner was served on arrival at the Crown and Cross Swords Hotel, Mr. Richard Thornton presiding After an excellent repast, the loyal toast was submitted by the chairman. Mr. W. P. Wells, the resident-manager, next proposed "Moss' Empires, Ltd.," and alluded to the prominent position which the company occupied in the world of entertainment. He thanked the staff for their co-operation, and concluded by coupling with the toast the names of the directors and their chairman, Mr. Thornton, who replied in felicitous terms.

A FEW other toasts followed, and the party then proceeded to the Spa Grounds, where an interesting programme of sports was carried out. The prizes, which were numerous, were distributed by Mrs. Thornton, and, after enjoying a substantial tea, the party prepared for the homeward journey. Amongst those present were Mr. and Mrs. Thornton, Messrs. Sidney Stone, W. P. Wells (manager), J. W. Kilgour (assistant-manager), J. W. Dawson (musical director), J. Kelly (stage manager), John Pellow (late manager under the company), Harry Esden (manager Sunderland Empire), and Mrs. Esden, Fred and Mrs. Phillips, Mark Abrahams, F Tindall, and J. Robson.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

ABERDEEN.—PALACE THEATRE.—Lessees, the United Company Theatres, Ltd.; Manager, Mr. Walter Gilbert.—Dr. Walford Bodie continues to be the great attraction here, and the interest in his remarkable performances shows no abatement. The Tokio Troupe of Japanese jugglers perform some extremely clever feats, and the other members of the company are nightly applauded for their efforts.

ACCRINGTON.—HIPPODROME.—Proprietors, Vandy, Potter, Weisker, and Willmot; Acting-Manager, Mr. W. Mould.—Miss Boden is a chic serio; the Leslie Bros. bring down the house; Ted Curtis and Ricks are very amusing in their black and white sketch; Johnson and Bert are duly appreciated; the Twin Brothers Dean must be highly complimented on their clever dancing; and the Bio. completes a very excellent bill.

ALDERSHOT.—ROYAL.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. Clarence Sounes; Acting-Manager, Mr. Jack Gladwin.—Messrs. Lloyds Philips and company top the bill this week with their cleverly-played tabloid drama, Betrayed Friendship, in which Messrs. T. Lloyd, N. Philips, W. Bint, J. Bramham, G. Lawrence, and Misses Ivy Howell and Lizzie Adare take part. One of the most appreciated turns is the musical entertainment by the Four Jumels, who manipulate various instruments with sweetness and dexterity. Fanny Robina scores a success in her medley, "The Albert Hall Concert," in which snatches of various patriotic songs are given in vigorous voice. Miss Florrie Cooper sings sweetly, and the houses have enjoyed her tuneful contralto voice. Miss Maud May Murray, in her artistic serpentine dances, is well received.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE.—THEATRE ROYAL.—Sole Owner and Manager, Mr. Chas. Revill; Acting Manager, Mr. Wm. Revill.—The Blind Foundling is being presented by Mr. Harry Tilbury's company. Both the author, Mr. Charles H. Phelps, and Mr. Tilbury successfully take important rôles, the former the hero, Gerald Dalton, an artist, and the latter, Dick Bobbins, a comic servant, with songs. Miss Ivy Rochefort, as Fairy, a blind foundling, wins sympathy; Miss Belle Tilbury, as the wife of the artist, makes her character a prominent figure; and Mr. Horatio Sinclair is vigorous as an adventurer.

EMPIRE HIPPODROME.—Proprietors, Messrs. W. H. Broadhead and Son; Resident Acting-Manager, Mr. W. Leech.—Here we have the local favourites, The Three Coopers, in a comedy song scena; Collard's Dogs appear as miniature lions and tigers; the Boston Twins, in their new comedy act, are most amusing; Jack Mansfield is a good dialect comedian; Hilton is a smart Scotch ventriloquist; Los Sados is a remarkably agile and expert juggler; the chief spectacular item is "The Enchanted Glen," an electrical transformation and musical scena; The Zerbinis appear in an attractive musical scena; and the Irving Trio also entertain; the Bioscope illustrates the poem, "Curfew shall not ring to-night."

ATTERCLIFFE.—PALACE THEATRE OF VARIETIES.—Proprietor, Mr. T. Allan Edwardes; Acting-Manager, Mr. J. Lacey Lyne; Assistant-Manager, Mr. Bert Lester.—The principal attraction here is furnished by Mr. Fred S. Peake and company in a sketch, entitled The Gambler. The title-rôle is well undertaken by Mr. F. S. Peake, ably assisted by Messrs. Edward Morton, Stuart Black, and Sidney Long; and Miss Dora Davis. Morimura, the Japanese conjurer, is paying a return visit; Little Babs Lloyd is interesting in coon-songs; the Brothers Stowe are a couple of smart juvenile equilibrists; hearty laughter greets the series of pictures, "A Fatal Sneeze," presented by Mr. E. C. Clayton on the "Palace Attergraph"; Manson and West introduce successfully a farcical interlude, entitled Telling the Tale; as a ventriloquist, Cavalli is deserving of high commendation; and Mr. Andy Burn is mirth-provoking.

BARROW-IN-FURNESS.—ROYALTY THEATRE AND OPERA HOUSE.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. Hugh Robertson; Resident-Manager, Mr. Geo. Stone.—The Master Criminal is here this week, performed in clever style by Miss Winifred Chalmer's company. Mr. Henry L. Macartney as Philip Manners acts the reckless son to perfection; Miss Winifred Chalmers as Cecile, the adventuress, gives an impersonation full of power and intelligence; Mr. Walter Rousby as Tommy Dala, and Miss Nellie May as Peggie Perks, in the comedy parts, keep the house in a good humour all the evening.

TIVOLI.—Lessee and Manager, Signor Pepi; Acting-Manager, Mr. G. Edgar Laban.—Jack Lorimer, the top of the bill, is paying a welcome return, and is more popular than ever; Rex Fox, who does a ventriloquial and musical act on the wire, is much appreciated; Robb Gilmore causes roars of laughter with his songs and dancing; Jimmy Shields, the one-legged vocalist, is well received; Dora Martini gives a graceful gymnastic act; the Bros. Askley are humorous in their comedy act, Next Please; Arthur Slater gives a capital whistling turn. The pictures by Vernon's Bioscope are still popular.

BATH.—PALACE THEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. Frank Macnaghten; Manager, Mr. Chas. Schuberth.—Raymond's Animated Picture company is still in evidence here, giving a popular entertainment twice each evening. Miss Norah Desmond continues to charm in a series of illustrated songs.

BEDFORD.—ROYAL COUNTY THEATRE.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. E. Graham-Falcon; Acting-Manager, Mr. Walter R. Wilson.—Kennedy's Komiks are giving their last performance here this week, and their departure will be regretted by all who are fond of "variety." An entirely new company, on Monday night, presented a programme that was much enjoyed. The hit of the evening was made by Mlle. Lucretia (of the Moss and Stoll Empires Tour), whose clever dancing was loudly encored. Next in order of merit may be placed Miss Ella Dunville and Miss Mabel Dare, who were recalled for their pretty duets and well-sung songs; the Sisters Verne did some clever skipping rope-dancing; and the Incemores provided a good "turn" with their marionette show; King and King supplied most of the humour during the evening.

BELFAST.—PALACE THEATRE.—Managing-Director, Mr. Fred W. Warden; General-Manager, Mr. J. de Frece; Resident-Manager, Mr. George Harris.—The chief feature of the bill here is the marvellous juggling performance by Mr. Morris Cronin and company, their various feats amazing all. The Ten Genis, in their remarkable acrobatic performance, form an important feature of this week's programme; and a hit of no small magnitude has been made by the Paolias, in their clever athletic act. Wylie's Dog Circus is certainly a unique example of animal training, the entire performance being remarkably clever; a good reception has been extended to Osborne and Brookes, musical comedy artists, and to the Rosna Trio, wire equilibrists. The Sisters Charnley, duettists and dancers; Les Rubens, in a musical comedy scena, The Two Merry Vagabonds; Lester May, comedian; and the Palace pictures, complete the bill.

ROYAL HIPPODROME.—Managing-Director, Mr. Will Sley; General-Manager, Mr. Henry T. Downs.—Miss Kitty Gordon tops the bill, and has been most successful with her delightful rendering of several songs; the balancing and juggling feats of the Robertye Family have been pronounced as sensational; and the cycling act of the Woodwards is very smart. Mr. Frank Lynne's comic songs have been hugely enjoyed; and Johnston and Miss De Vere appear in their wire and clever speciality act. Snowball and Miss Dolia furnish a most attractive act, which has taken well; and Miss Lillie Souter is a talented comedienne with catchy songs. Also appearing to much advantage are Wild, Willie, and West, the bounding navvies, whose act has created roars of laughter; Miss Effie Stuart, Scotch comedienne; and the Hipposcope pictures complete a fine programme.

EMPIRE THEATRE OF VARIETIES.—General-Manager, Mr. Frank Allen; Acting-Manager, Mr. John A. Walker.—The leading attraction here is the sketch, entitled The Little Stowaway, which has been voted a big success, the acting of the various members of the company—Miss Eva Lumley, Mr. J. K. Walton, &c.—being irreproachable. That droll comedian, Mr. George Formby, returns with some new songs, which he renders in funny style; and the Norman Leonard Trio have been accorded an enthusiastic welcome for their musical act, the violin solos rendered by one of their number being excellent. Mr. Jas. Stewart, "the tramp at the piano," has taken well; and Miss Maud Mortimer, a charming comedienne, gains the utmost approval. Other items of the programme are Celest, in a novel and clever wire act; Mr. Ellis Barrington, a vocalist with a capital voice; and the Bioscope.

BIRKENHEAD.—NEW THEATRE ROYAL.—Sole Lessee, Mr. W. W. Kelly; Acting-Manager, Mr. Reginald Grant; Secretary, Miss Isabel Morris.—Mr. John F. Preston's company is continuing a fortnight's successful engagement, appearing this week in Lady Godiva, in which Miss Mabelle F. Barlow gives an effective performance of the title-rôle. Mr. Preston is admirably suited as Tom o' Coventry, a part to which he does the fullest justice; Leofric is well impersonated by Mr. Harry Lloyd; Mr. W. Howard Barlow is a good Algar; and Mr. Hardy Macro is well placed as Unwolf. Lady Aldyth is adequately sustained by Miss Ethel Rainforth; Miss Laura Wright is efficient as Elfrida; and Robin Shacklebolt is skilfully impersonated by Mr. Arthur Lenville. The play is carefully and liberally staged, and has been cordially received.

ARGYLE THEATRE OF VARIETIES.—Manager, Mr. D. J. Clarke.—Miss Edith Muir and Mr. Hubert Bartlett, assisted by a competent company, are presenting their amusing sketch, The Collar Stud, with excellent results; and the Three Royal Dreadnoughts (including Miss Rennier) exhibit some extraordinary feats in rifle shooting. Attractive turns are also contributed by Miss Rose Elliott, vocalist; Mr. J. W. Gallagher, comedian; Boden and Bell, juvenile dancers; Miss Nellie Cotter, comedienne; Miss Aimee Desiree, in some clever hand illusions; and Brown's Royal Bioscope.

Adeler and Sutton.—Almost an entire change of company introduces Mr. Fred Walmsley, comedian and mimic; Mr. Tom Evans, baritone; Mr. Eric Charlswood, comedian; Miss Edith Heron-Brown, musical entertainer; Mr. Perci Gallno, instrumentalist and comedian; and Mr. Arthur Dicks, accompanist. These excellently-conducted pierrot entertainments have deservedly become highly popular.

THE TOWER, NEW BRIGHTON.—Manager, Mr. William Holland.—A large audience assembled on Monday in the Grand Theatre of the New Brighton Tower to witness the production of Hickory Wood and John Tiller's nautical spectacular ballet, Jolly Jack. The incidents of the extravaganza are presumed to have occurred in Nelson's day, and are embellished by a number of tasteful ballets. The musical numbers are rendered with artistic finish, and the efforts of the soloists and chorus are applauded. The company includes Miss May Iris, a winsome Nellie Porter; and Miss Cissy Iris, an admirable Jack Sales. Mr. Will Lytton and Mr. Walter Watson work hard and effectively as two strolling players; Miss Rene Howard as Captain of the Coast Guard, and Miss Florrie Page as the Captain of Marines, are successful. Other parts are in the capable hands of Miss Celice Donaldson, Miss May Sharples, Mr. E. D. Lennard, and Mr. George Malpert. The leading item in the programme is preceded by "Her Birthday," a vocal turn by clever Miss Edith Chantter, and a display on the bioscope.

BIRMINGHAM.—ALEXANDRA THEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr. Lester Collingwood; Acting-Manager, Mr. Fred Bernardo.—The Alexandra continues to enjoy record summer business with, for this week, Miss Ethel Van Praagh and Mr. J. Edward Whitty's company, in An Unwedded Wife. Miss Van Praagh as Marion avails herself of every opportunity to score, her acting being of a superlative order; Mr. Whitty in the rôle of P.C. Runyin diffuses humour of a rare quality, setting the house in a roar at every sally; and Mr. Will Casey as Napoleon B. Boomer and Miss Jessie Gilette as Caraway Crumpet shine cleverly in the humorous element. Mr. E. St. Clair Forbes plays the villain, Philip Blakstone, in an accomplished manner; Mr. Wilton Bedford is a worthy accomplice as Christopher Lennox; Mr. Valentine Henry makes every effort tell as Frank Armstrong; Mr. Logan Darra is exceedingly good as John Hawthorne; Miss Elsie Walton gains sympathy as Elsie Langham; and Little Doris is a popular figure with her clever acting and singing as Reggie.

CARLTON THEATRE, SALTLEY.—Licensee and Manager, Mr. James Alexander.—The Moore-Kennedy Combination continue here, in that now popular summer entertainment yclept Kennedy's Komiks; the Vervains prove themselves expert coon singers and dancers, introducing the character of Topsy, &c., with clever effect; Will Ethardo is warmly applauded for his marvellous dexterity as a juggler; Sandes and Vincent are popular in a novel contortionist act; Violet Leslie is admired for her ability as a vocalist; Arthur Jolliott is a droll comedian, and a baritone vocalist to boot; Mme. Worthie, Mr. Henry Slater as Pedro Ramon, and Mr. Fred Carston as Joan Lopez.

Mr. Harry Kilburn is immensely successful as Hans Wagner; and Miss Sophie Harriss makes a decided hit as Mrs. Maddison Crocker. Mr. Frank Crimp ably sustains the title-rôle, his singing being a special feature of his performance. François is cleverly represented by Mr. Ernest Gifford; and Jimmie is quite safe in the hands of Miss Mollie Wynne. Mr. S. Lindon Lang as Tom Wagner, and Mr. Bernard Russell as Arthur Rosemoss, also do justice to their parts. The chorus and the scenery and dresses are entirely satisfactory.

Miss Dorothy Oswald gives an artistic and sympathetic portrayal of Lady Isabel; Miss Edna Hana makes an excellent Barbara Hare; Miss Ethel Bateman does good work as Camelia Carlyle; and Miss Maudie Vincent is commendable as Joyce. As Little Willie Miss Olive Lyons is entitled to a special word of praise; Mr. Herbert Barrs gives a thorough impersonation of Archibald Carlyle; and Mr. Ronald Grahame is sufficiently villainous as Francis Levison. Mr. A. B. Lyons evokes much laughter as Bibby Bulbs; Mr. Arthur Staples, Mr. A. Selwood, and Mr. Willis Collins all do well in their respective parts.

GRAND PIER PAVILION.—Manager, Mr. John H. Stevenson.—The Æolian Opera Singers are paying a welcome return visit here this week, every item being encored on Monday. Mr. R. Leach sang "The desert" most effectively; Mr. H. Connorton's song, "Wonderful," was delightfully rendered; Mr. Charles E. Browne gave some remarkably clever musical sketches; Miss Lilian Payne sang "Fairies" artistically; Miss Rose Alderman's song, "Someone," was warmly received. Mr. Frank Lens displayed some delightful pictures on the Bioscope.

WHITBY.—SPA THEATRE.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. Payne Seddon.—The boards of this theatre were occupied on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday by Mr. William Mollison's company in Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush, good audiences being present on each occasion.

WATERLOO THEATRE.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. Julian Bainbridge.—A Little Vagabond was staged on the 18th inst., the occasion of Mr. Bainbridge's benefit. The hall was crowded, and a fine interpretation of the piece was given.

WORKINGTON.—OPERA HOUSE.—Lessee, Mr. Stanley Rogers; Manager, Mr. Falconer Jackes.—A Heart's Desire, by Messrs. Elliman, was presented on Monday night to an appreciative house; Mr. F. V. Fenn as the Hero was manly and effective; and Miss E. Tooney was excellent as the Heroine; Mr. E. Vane gave satisfaction as Eric and Mr. S. Claydon as Bertie; Miss E. Seaton as Gwendoline well sustained the part; and Miss A. Dalby was piquant as Elsie; and Miss E. Rose was a sprightly impersonator of Julie.

WREXHAM.—EMPIRE MUSIC HALL.—Proprietor, Mr. Jno. J. Scott; Manager, Mr. C. W. Collings.—This week Miss May Zant and her juveniles, in a pot-pourri of song and dance, provide an entertaining item; Chester and Lee's Marionettes are as good as ever; Mr. Will Lindsay causes roars of laughter with his amusing sayings; Miss Stella Millar sings in a pleasing manner; Frank and Violet Payte, in their sketch, Betsy's Blunder, take well; and the pictures are as welcome and entertaining as ever.

YORK.—OPERA HOUSE.—Managing-Director, Mr. William Peacock; Acting-Manager, Sidney Brook.—Jordan and Harvey head the bill this week with an amusing duologue; Clarke and Glenney in an absurdity, The Haunted House, are well received; and the Elvio Trio also give a clever sketch. Wilton, Heriot, and company also score heavily, and the Alskarnos are expert tumblers. Ryde and Beeman, acrobats; Allsopp and Beckwith; Bessie Willon, vocalist; and the Bioscope complete the bill.

"THE CORSICAN BROTHERS."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—In your very interesting article re The Corsican Brothers of the 20th inst, and a comic treatment of same being done at Brighton in 1870, I beg to mention it was for the annual regatta performances on July 18 of that year, which were enhanced by the prizes being exhibited on the stage. The programme consisted of two pieces: Not a Bad Judge—J. K. Nye, Lavater; C. S. James, Betman; J. M. Nias, Lug; C. Harcourt, Treval; Ellen Wallis, Mme. Betman; and A. Maryon, Louise;. Mason and Roe's burlesque, The Corsican Brothers, was rendered by W. H. P. Bioletti as Mme. de Frenchi's twin sons; Edward Major, Madame; J. M. Nias, Griffo; W. H. Mason, Renard; and C. W. Mason, Martelli.—Yours faithfully,

JOHN PETER ROBINSON.

17, Gower-place, W.C., July 25.

"MY SWEETHEART" is this week at the Palace Theatre, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Possessed of a good voice, Mr. Edward Rawlinson is an ideal Tony Faust, and he receives able assistance from Miss Lizzie Hall, a vivacious Tina (My Sweetheart). Mr. Wilson Coleman (Harold Bartlett) and Miss Teresa Haynes (Mrs. Fleeter) both lend capital support, and praise is also due to Miss Olivia Downes, Miss Lily Smith, Miss Fanny Olive, Miss Violet Etherington, Mr. Sydney Spenser, Mr. Frank Wilson, Mr. John F. Trayner, and Mr. James Porter.

AT the Grand Theatre, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Honour Thy Father was produced this week by a good company. In the strenuous rôle of Lilian Garth, Miss Violet Hammersley is a decided success. Not less impressive is the rendering Mr. J. W. Evelyn gives of the stricken father. Duncan Bly is ably impersonated by Mr. Howell Travis, and other conspicuous members of a large caste are Mr. Robert Gilbert (Jack Halyard), Mr. W. H. Melrose (Ned Pennycomequick), Miss Winnie Donovan (a charming Mercy Merry), Miss Ada Salmon (Poppy Cornleigh), and Miss Maud Grey (Violet Wilfrid).

AT Newcastle-on-Tyne Empire this week, the Elliott Savonas in their latest creation, The Palace of Orpheus, provide a particularly fine musical turn, which meets with frequent and prolonged rounds of applause. In its line it is a show that will take some beating. Miss Ray Wallace, mimic, is again well worth hearing, and Harry Weldon is a good comedian. Walter Munroe, an old and ever-popular favourite, the Moulier Sisters, in a horizontal bar act, the Garganis, comedy acrobats, David Stewart, in beautifully illustrated song, Josie Mooney, vocalist and dancer, and the Sisters Caselli, dancers, are all good turns.

PRESENTATION.—On Saturday night last, the termination of the stock season at H. M. Theatre, Carlisle, Mr. Chas. R. Stone, the popular stage-manager and comedian of the company was presented, at the conclusion of the performance, with a well-lined purse, contributed by the company and the lessees, as a mark of sympathy for his recent severe accident and appreciation of his valuable services. The presentation was made by Mr. Thos. Courtice, and was responded to by Mr. Stone in a few appreciative words.

BUCHANAN'S
"BLACK & WHITE"
THE WHISKY OF WORLD WIDE REPUTE

LONDON & SUBURBAN THEATRES.

THE CAMDEN.

On Monday, July 22, the Musical Play,
"DARE-DEVIL DOROTHY"

Mr. Henry Swinerd's company is appearing at this theatre during the week in that remarkably successful play Dare-Devil Dorothy, a drama with a large supply of musical items introduced. In the title rôle Miss Dorothy Desmonde distinguishes herself by her natural and dashing picture of an Australian's farmer's daughter. Miss Desmonde is also the possessor of a sweet-toned voice, which she uses to much advantage in her various songs, notably in that charming number, "The cuckoo." Mr. Bert Edwardes is very amusing as Silas, and scores heavily with his various songs. Miss Nellie Harcourt appears as Judith, a part she plays in the liveliest and breeziest manner imaginable. Her singing and dancing are equally agreeable, her skipping-rope dance being pretty. Mr. Walter Ashley, as Harold Vivian, plays in manly and earnest style. Mr. Ashley is also well applauded for his song, "Come, my lad, and be a soldier." Mr. H. C. Ward does well as the evil spirit of the play, Captain Dudley. Featherstone Haugh is amusingly depicted by Mr. Dean Cliffe; Mr. W. G. Hearson makes an acceptable Smith; Mr. A. Hartley does much good work as Hawkins; and Miss Marie Vere is a bright and vivacious Ruth. The Misses Mabel and Lily Blake contributed a clever and dainty mirror dance. The play is prettily staged, under the direction of Mr. W. J. Cordiner, who is also General-Manager for the company. The musical numbers are admirably played by the orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Leslie Whitham. Mr. Robert Arthur's interests are quite safe in the hands of Mr. Wilfred Stanford, the Manager of the theatre.

PRINCE'S, POPLAR.

This handsome theatre is establishing a record in London by its successful cinematograph entertainments, which have now entered their ninth week here, and still continue to exhibit to large and appreciative audiences. A thrilling and awe-inspiring picture is "Vesuvius in Eruption," in which can be seen the mass of moving lava together with clouds of burning ashes, while a few daring travellers are noticed to have ventured upon the mountain side. The military evolutions, with the march past and Royal salute at the Aldershot Review, held before the Kings of England and Denmark, roused the hearty applause of the audience, while a long film representing the great "Glove Fight—Gunner Moir v. Jack Palmer," is evidently to the liking of the house. "The Rogie Falls" appeals to all lovers of scenery, the hills with their glorious covering of heather making this view of Bonnie Scotland most acceptable. Humorous subjects are predominant in the programme, and hearty laughs are secured by "Husbands Beware," "A Reluctant Dog," and "Please Help the Blind." "The Haunted Hotel" is a cleverly arranged picture, the movements of various utensils, as well as the extraordinary antics of the articles of food, providing much amusement. An example of life on the prairie is seen in "Hooligans of the West," and an Eastern illusions, portrayed in brilliant colours, entitled "The Magic Ring," is effective, while "A Smart Capture," "A Sure Laugh," "Quarter Day Conjuring," and "Customs Officials Outwitted" obtain well-merited approbation. The Manager, Mr. C. Melville Lurring, studies in every way the comfort of his patrons.

CORONET THEATRE.

On Monday, July 22, the first production of an original Musical Duologue, written by S. J. Adair Fitzgerald, music by Napoleon Lambelet,
"HER ANSWER."

Tom ..... Richard Green
Bob ..... Reginald White

Mr. Robert Arthur's triple bill, submitted under the direction of Messrs. Marshall Moore and Frederick Stanhope, this week includes the new original musical duologue, Her Answer, which makes a bright, amusing, and melodious little curtain-raiser. Tom and Bob have both fallen in love with a sweet young thing at a hop, and each is in ecstasies. At first it appears as if they are each in love with the same girl, but eventually things smooth themselves out, and it transpires that their sweethearts are separate and distinct entities, and that they have sorted themselves out quite correctly in accordance with the dictates of their hearts. A good bit of fun is got out of the situation arising from the friends' jealousy of one another and their keen rivalry on the love-path, and Mr. Richard Green and Mr. Reginald White acted on Monday, the night of the production of the piece, with great spirit and vivacity. "Love is a whimsical god" is a capital song cleverly sung by Mr. Reginald White, and "Oh, little unknown!" is a very pretty ballad delightfully rendered by Mr. Richard Green. The duet, "What will she do, what will she say?" in which they join forces, is also a lively example of the author's and composer's talent. Her Answer is likely to be heard of again.

Faithful James, which took so tremendously on the occasion of its reproduction the first week of the "triple bill" season, has been revived this last week, and goes with a swing from start to finish, and there is evidently any amount of life left in B. C. Stephenson's old farce. In the title rôle Mr. Rutland Barrington repeats his admirable character sketch of the artful and resourceful but blundering old waiter, and the part fits him like a glove, whilst his up-to-date "gags" are always in good taste and in keeping with the part. Misses Nellie Moore and Winifred Macey and Messrs. George F. Mackarness, Fredk. W. Hearne, Frank Lacy, and Earle Hopwood all do good service among the mirth-making brigade.

So well has Audran's charming opera, La Mascotte, been received that it has been repeated again this week, with identically the same cast. Mr. Whitworth Mitton, who gives such a capital impersonation of the invertebrate Prince Fritellina, Crown Prince of Pisa, also sings after the first piece two fine old songs, "My queen" and "Drink to me only with thine eyes." Next week the theatre closes, reopening on Bank Holiday with Two Little Vagabonds.

THE WEST LONDON.

On Monday, July 22, the Drama, entitled
"THE PRODIGAL PARSON."

This play, from the pens of Messrs. F. L. Connyngham and C. A. Clarke, is quite to the taste of the West Londoners, the various exciting incidents therein receiving their closest attention. Mr. M. V. Garrod puts in plenty of good work as the Rev. Tom Godley, his efforts being cordially appreciated; Mr. Paul Beckett does well as Enoch Jaggins; Mr. George Allen brings the rascally traits in the character of Ben Jaggins well to the fore; Mr. Walter Vincent realistically portrays Ned Kettlepin; whilst Mr. Owen Remonde keeps things lively with his sprightly impersonation of Phil Drive. Miss Sybil Hammersley deserves every credit for her telling representation of Gretchen Vans Crans, afterwards Mrs. Phil Drive; Miss Violet Jeffries tastefully enacts the blind child, Myrtle Godley; and Miss Bertha Kingston sustains the important rôle of Fern Godley with womanly charm and convincing pathos. The play is well mounted, and favourably received.

All the New York theatres, with one or two exceptions, are closed for the summer, but they will resume operations early in August, so the "close season" is to be pretty short this year. At the Herald-square Theatre The Orchid is doing splendidly, the theatre being delightfully cool and comfortable, thanks to big blocks of ice and electric fans.

CENTURY OF "MRS. WIGGS."

The success of Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch in London again proves the truth of the axiom that "there is nothing so certain as the unexpected," for we have had nothing so typically American, so eloquent of the soil, as the comedy of which the 100th performance was given on Saturday at Terry's. President Roosevelt's recommendation of Alice Hegan Rice's story did much in the States for the simple annals of the struggling mother, in which may be discovered "the root principles of self-help and helpfulness towards others." But Mrs. Wiggs, if we demur somewhat to her untidiness, teaches us much more than this—she inculcates in us the lesson of true charity. Patience and gentleness and love are mixed up in her nature; and when she stirs the audience to enthusiasm by her championship of Lovey Mary she preaches a moving sermon with a simple eloquence that cannot be acquired in the schools.

The character seems inseparable from the actress playing it. Mrs. Madge Carr Cook has made it her own—for us she completely realises Mrs. Wiggs. Her kindliness of heart, her invincible optimism, her odd ways, her shrewd wit, her keenness of observation—all these are to be found in Mrs. Cook's rendering. Mrs. Wiggs's friends are mostly eccentric, not to say queer. Miss Hazy, for instance, strikes the English playgoer as somewhat exceeding the possible limits of artful simplicity; but her oddities and the 'cute worldliness of her lover, Mr. Stubbins, make for laughter in a courting scene as original as it is funny. Miss Louise Closser and Mr. Frederick Burton share the success of this scene in the first act, and the broad comedy of it on Saturday night appealed most successfully to a crowded audience, which gave an uproarious reception to the piece.

Mrs. Eichorn and Mrs. Schultz, who represent the censorious spirit, do so with no lack of bitterness of tongue, and both Miss Grace Griswold and Miss Bertha Livingston—both admirably made-up—serve the dramatic scheme excellently by their clever impersonations of these "lady mar-joys." The children, each in her own particular way, are all delightful, and Misses Edith Story as Asia, Miss Dutchie Forsyth as Australia, and Miss Pearl Egan as Europena, enliven the scene of Mrs. Wiggs's home with some lively comedy.

The pathetic interest of the piece is finely sustained by Miss Lottie Alter, who as Lovey Mary plays with a touching sincerity that goes straight to the hearts of her hearers. Mr. Forrest Robinson teaches us how to comprehend the character of Mr. Wiggs; and Miss Florence Busby and Mr. Kenneth Rivington give a light and agreeable touch to the parts of Miss Lucy and Mr. Bob, who are the good fairies of the piece—after Mrs. Wiggs bien entendu. Mr. Thomas Kelly's Billy Wiggs is a typical American lad; and Mr. T. Swan makes Chris Hazy an alert figure with his wooden leg. Mr. G. Hagar Robinson interests us in H. Hunkerdunkus Jones; and Messrs. G. Howard, S. H. Williams, Robert Downing, Cecil Yapp, E. C. Buffum, Masters Batchelor and Richard Storey, and Miss Effie Byrne fill minor parts adequately. The stage-management of Mr. Louis Mercanton should be praised. The one-hundreth performance was celebrated by the presentation to each member of the audience of a souvenir in the shape of a copy of the story of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." This, however, does not cover the dramatic scheme of the play, which also includes the story of "Lovey Mary."

THE LYRIC, HAMMERSMITH.

On Monday, July 22, the Drama,
"IN THE SHADOW OF NIGHT."

Crowded houses are the rule this (the last for the present) week at the Lyric, where the above play is proving highly acceptable. The last scene, with real water in the river, proves a great attraction. Mr. James Willard has a particularly good company, which includes Mr. George Harvey, who enacts the squire, John Allington, with good effect. Mr. Austin Mortimer plays Gordon Allington, the hero, with plenty of energy; Mr. Raymond Thomas makes Clifford Yorke a sufficiently detestable character; as Jake Grudgewell, a poacher, Mr. William Hayward gives a good character-study; Mr. Herbert Belmore is an amusing Tom Nainby; and Mr. Cecil Raymond also adds considerably to the fun in his double rôle of the Rev. Nathaniel Hope and Joe Jackson, the rural postman. Mr. James Ingledon looks a typical farmer in his part of James Woodstock; and Inspector Manners is in the safe hands of Mr. Harry Emerson. Quite one of the best performances in the piece is that of Miss Phyllis French as Bob, a little tramp; Miss Ada Oakley wins sympathy as the heroine, Violet Kingston; as Molly Woodstock Miss Tina Shaw is responsible for much merriment, playing her part in very good style; and other parts are well filled by Messrs. R. M. Butt, Albert Plant, W. Branscombe, Richie Bell, M. Rowe, and Wilton Forde. Last, but by no means least, mention must be made of the excellent performance of "Gyp," a terrier who on every available opportunity did his level best to make a meal of some part of the villain's clothing. The play is well staged, the river scene being most effective.

MLLE. ISADE BOURI'S CONCERT.

At Brinsmead Galleries, on Monday, Mlle. Isade Bouri gave a highly successful evening concert. Mlle. Bouri, who was assisted by Mr. Clay Thomas, Miss Gwladys Arden, and Miss Violet Tatlow, was first heard in Gounod's Cavatina from his opera, Reine de Saba, which was gracefully sung and much applauded. Mlle. Bouri, who has a pure and well-cultivated voice, also sang Batten's "Love song of Har Dyal," Hahn's charming melody, "Si mes avaients des ailes," and Luzzi's "Lucia," which were well received by the audience, and later in the programme Massonet's song, "Air de l'infante," from Le Cid. A clever youthful pianist, Miss Hannah Seymour, played "Fantasia," by Mr. Lansdowne Cottell, and the same composer's popular "Westminster Chimes" (given by special request), and Mr. Clay Thomas used a flexible baritone voice with great effect in "A jolly old cavalier" (Dix), and Squire's song, "Lighterman Tom," while Miss Violet Tatlow created a most favourable impression by her capital singing of "Nobil Signor." Miss Beatrice Beaufort sang "Le nil," by Leroux, with good expression and intonation, and Miss Muriel Leroy's piano solo "Carnival espagnol" (Delcrux) proved a pleasing feature of the concert. As a relief to vocal items, a clever humorous recitation, "The Telegram" (Arden) was given by Miss Gwladys Arden, who has, in addition to an attractive appearance, a pleasing voice and bright, effective style. Miss Arden's recitation was much appreciated by the audience. Several of the vocalists were pupils of Mr. Lansdowne Cottell, and did great credit to the training they have received at the London Conservatoire of Music. Mlle. Isade Bouri, in the second part of the programme, gave a finished rendering of Lotti's "Pur dicèsti"; and among others whose efforts added to the success of the concert may be mentioned Miss Gertrude Battersby, who gave a piano solo, "March of the brave," of her own composition, also singing "The child of Spain," by Louis Cottell. Miss Lucinda Barton acted as accompanist.

Princess Louise of Battenberg and Princess Henry of Battenberg were present at Terry's Theatre on Monday night, and witnessed the performance of Mr. Gaston Mayer's American company in Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch.

Mr. Thomas F. Reilly is a passenger on the White Star Liner Cedric due at Liverpool from New York to-day.

"THE LONELY LIFE."

By Alfred Sutro.

Mr. Cassadine ..... Mr. Harold V. Neilson
Walter Gifford ..... Mr. Martyn Roland
Janet ..... Miss Amy Sangster

This little one-act play is rather overweighted by its authorship and its distinguished predecessors from the same pen; but the probability is that Mr. Sutro wrote it long before he conceived any of the larger plays which made him famous. Certainly, The Lonely Life adds nothing to his reputation, and it is not likely that it will be played with anything like successful results. Those who witnessed its production at the Queen's Theatre, Manchester, on Monday, showed an intelligent interest in the idea it contains, though conscious of an element of absurdity. It depicts a girl of twenty, well connected, and gifted with a strong taste for painting, living the lonely life of an artist in her studio in Gower-street. She is under the tuition of Mr. Cassadine, a man of fifty, who has achieved some success, and who is married to a wife with whom he cannot live. She is also the object of her cousin Walter Gifford's affection; and Gifford cannot go on any longer without protesting against her foolish and unnecessary isolation, and against her association with a man whose circumstances are so unsuitable to qualify him for friendship with a trusting young girl as those of Mr. Cassadine. The argument between Gifford and Janet is, more than any other part, characteristic of the dramatist, who has The Walls of Jericho and The Perfect Lover to his name; it is virile, natural, and depicts especially the dogged and sensible character of Gifford with unerring clearness. But his commonsense avails him nothing in Janet's eyes; she will have none of him—she is infatuated with Cassadine; and when the latter makes his appearance Gifford also is overcome by the candour and integrity that are supposed to shine in the artist's countenance, and instead of creating a scene as he intended to do, he goes off with an apology for his suspicions of the elder man—an unexpected and incredible proceeding. Cassadine has come to tell Janet that he is going abroad. Janet cries out that he must take her, for she loves him. The scene is easily conceivable. The passionate protests of a girl of twenty (foolish enough to any girl of twenty in the audience)—the renunciation, tinged with a sense of humour, of the man of fifty, who could not congruously be anything but a father to her, if he saddled himself with her at all—his shrewd parting advice that she shall go back to her friends—ends in his withdrawal and the girl's despair. Sensible as the issue is, however, it is permeated with a sentiment of the lonely life for both. In his case, it may be accepted as quite in the order of things; in hers, it is but a curable distemper, unworthy of serious consideration. The acting was uniformly good. Mr. Harold V. Nielson played Mr. Cassadine with an intelligent understanding of the character and unfailing self-possession, bringing out all the pith and significance of the lines; as Walter Gifford, Mr. Martyn Roland contributed a distinctly clever and entertaining impersonation; and Miss Amy Sangster's depiction of the wilful and sentimental Janet was marked by individuality and accomplishments of no mean order, quite realising, no doubt, the author's idea of a charming and clever girl misled.

"THE RECKONING."

By Stanley Houghton and Frank G. Nasmith.

Merlin ..... Mr. Bartlett Garth
Trevor ..... Mr. Martyn Roland
Gabrielle de Richepin ..... Miss Amy Sangster

The action of The Reckoning, a new one-act play, produced at the Queen's Theatre, Manchester, on Monday, takes place in the rooms of Merlin, a paid bully, and the period is 1790, when French refugees were plentiful in England. Merlin is under obligation to his patron, Trevor, to kill a young Frenchman, de Richepin, who has been goaded to insult the bully in a public café. It would seem that Merlin is not so callous a fellow as the majority of his kind, for he surveys the prospect with compunction, and is not without reflection on the misdeeds of his life, and a consequent distaste for the man whose pay maintains him in iniquity. There is no chance for de Richepin, as Merlin is an expert fencer, and it is patent that Trevor has an interest in de Richepin's death. While Trevor is out of the room, arranging for the coach that is to take them to the scene of the duel, a woman enters. It is de Richepin's sister, Gabrielle, who has come to plead for her brother's life. The interview between Merlin and this girl contains the substance of the plot; it is somewhat tedious and explanatory, though it is not without interesting moments, while the argument is solely on the theme of intercession. Gradually it transpires that Gabrielle is the daughter of the woman Merlin once loved, from whom he was separated by a trick of substituted letters, conveyed from one to the other by a false friend. It is only now that he learns the truth about the correspondence. Trevor returns to the room in time to hear it also. This knowledge in de Richepin's identity is, of course, sufficient to change Merlin's attitude. Gabrielle goes, glad of her brother's safety. Trevor would conduct her forth, but Merlin prevents that. It was Trevor who came between Merlin and the woman he loved; it is Trevor, therefore, not de Richepin, who must die. A duel follows, and Trevor is killed. The piece contains some clever dialogue, and rises to a sufficiently dramatic conclusion. The rôle of Gabrielle de Richepin was made interesting by the neat and capable acting of Miss Amy Sangster, while, as Trevor, Mr. Martyn Roland answered all requirements, and Mr. Bartlett Garth made the most of his opportunities as Merlin. Mr. Harold V. Nielson produced the play in highly creditable style.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The programme of the choral and orchestral concert given by the students on Tuesday evening was entirely devoted to the music of Bach. The cantata "Du wahrer Gott" came first in the programme, the soloists being Miss Ethel Duthoit, Miss Dilys Jones, and Mr. Spencer Thomas. Although the singing of the duet for soprano and alto, "Du wahrer Gott und David's Sohn," proved somewhat uncertain, Mr. Spencer Thomas distinguished himself in the recitative for tenor. On the whole the rendering of the second cantata, "Wachet, betet, seid bereit," was most successful, and the soloists—Miss Gladys Honey, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Spencer Thomas, and Mr. Robert Chignell—deserved praise in their by no means easy task. Some of the most difficult music fell to the bass, and Mr. Robert Chignell may be heartily commended for his artistic singing of the florid passages in the final bass recitative. In the earlier portions of the cantata the chorus sounded slightly rough, but the chorale "Freu dich sehr, Omeine Seele" was finely sung. By far the most interesting feature in the concert was the charming Overture (Suite) in D major, admirably played by the orchestra, the Bourrée I., Gavotte, Menuet I., and the joyous Réjouissance proving particularly attractive. So pleased, also, were the larger audience by Mr. Herbert Arnold Smith's organ solo of the famous Toccata and Fugue in D minor that the clever performer was twice recalled to the platform. Miss Gladys Honey sang with ability the air "Bete, bete," from cantata "Mache dich, mein Geist, bereit," being ably supported by Mr. Robert Murchie (flute) and Mr. F. Gershom Parkington (violoncello). Sir Charles V. Stanford conducted, and the concert concluded with the cantata "Now shall the Grace" ("Nun ist das Heil"), sung by full chorus.

"THE BLUE MONKEY."

A Musical Farce, in Two Acts, by Walter R. Flint, with Music by H. Wilkinson, A. Taggart, and others; Produced at the Brighton Palace Pier Theatre, on Monday, July 22.

Professor Meadows ..... Mr. Bruce Lindley
Georgie Meadows ..... Miss Sadie Neville
Freestater, I.B.D. ..... Mr. Edwin F. Fysher
Miss Bliss ..... Miss Rosemary Rees
Harry Dare ..... Mr. Phillip Sefton
Nimble Nat ..... Mr. Sidney Benson
Adolphe Beausejour Froget ..... Mr. Chas. Swinburne
Dent Istjoy ..... Mr. Philip Durham
Edna Teething ..... Miss Merrie Omar
Isabel St. Clair ..... Miss Loudolph Barrett

Under the direction of Mr. Charles Carey the two-act musical farce, The Blue Monkey, was produced at the Brighton Palace Pier Theatre last Monday evening. The story has a very slender plot, and the music is bright and spirited. In the first act, which opens in the Rose Garden at Dowell Academy for Select Young Ladies, we find the pupils in high glee in anticipation of their breaking-up. Professor Meadows, whose house adjoins the rose garden, is a collector of curios, and is much excited over the possession of a rare treasure—a model of a blue monkey in solid turquoise, with diamond eyes. A rival collector, Freestater, I.B.D., finding Professor Meadow will not part with the blue monkey, determines to secure it by surreptitious means, and obtains the assistance of Nimble Nat (of the Dials), who is wanted by the police. Freestater promises the burglar £10 if he succeeds in robbing Meadows of the blue monkey. Nimble Nat hangs about the neighbourhood, and, finding the Professor has left home for a little fishing, is about to enter the house when he mets Harry Dare (of the Evening Gun), who is enamoured of Meadows' niece, Georgie Meadows, and wishes to gain the consent of the uncle to his marriage with her. Nimble Nat, adopting a bold policy, passes himself off as the absent Professor, and promises Harry Dare shall marry Georgie, and that he will make handsome settlements upon the young lovers. Meadows returns from his fishing, and surprises Georgie by informing her that Harry's story of his consent to the marriage is a mistake, for he had not even seen that young man. The lovers quarrel, Georgie assuming that Harry had deceived her. They part, and the act closes with Nimble Nat rushing from the house with the stolen blue monkey, wrapped in a handkerchief.

In the second act, in the Recreation Room of the Ladies' School, we are introduced to the principal, Miss Bliss, who is evidently bent upon making a match with the Professor. Nimble Nat, without invitation, attends the ladies' dancing party, and Miss Bliss confronts him and accuses him of being the much-wanted burglar. A mock tragic struggle takes place between them, and Miss Bliss gains possession of the lost blue monkey. Soon, however, Freestater appears upon the scene, and, posing as a detective, is allowed to walk off with the rare curio under the pretence that he must take it to Scotland Yard for identification; but eventually, with the assistance of Harry Dare, the Professor once more recovers his treasure.

Mr. Bruce Lindley gave an effective impersonation of Professor Meadows; as Georgie Meadows Miss Sadie Neville acted with much charm, and sang in pleasing style. She was encored in the song "On the Isle of Anglesey," and was also warmly applauded for her tasteful rendering of "Holding hands," "Come to me," and "Maisie." Mr. Phillip Sefton as Harry Dare marked his enactment by earnestness, and was heard to advantage in the song "My Darling" and in the duet "Spooning in the Summer-house," which he sang with Miss Sadie Neville. Mr. Sidney Benson made an amusing Nimble Nat, and proved himself a capital dancer. Miss Rosemary Rees was a graceful and refined Miss Bliss, and displayed dainty vocalisation in her "Fairyland" song; Mr. Edwin F. Fysher made the most of his few opportunities as Freestater; and the small parts of Adolphe Beausejour Froget (a waiter) and Isabel St. Clair (a massive schoolgirl) were ably sustained by Mr. Charles Swinburne and Miss Loudolph Barrett respectively. Special dances were cleverly given by Miss Madge Lacey, the choruses were well sung, and the duties of musical-director were in the hands of Mr. Stephen Bowring.

THEATRICAL WEDDING.

The Church of the Holy Trinity, Folkestone, was the scene of an interesting ceremony on the 17th inst., when Mr. Edward Vaughan and Miss Dorothy Moore-Lane, both well known in the theatrical profession, were united in wedlock. Miss Moore-Lane is very well known in Dover and the district, having frequently appeared in theatrical performances at the Pleasure Gardens Theatre and at several society functions at Dover, and there was a very large and fashionable attendance at the church. The bride looked charming in a dress of white ninon de soie over chiffon and white taffetas, made in the Empire style, and trimmed with lace, satin, and orange blossom: She wore a wreath of real orange blossom and a Brussels lace veil, and carried a lovely shower bouquet of white roses and heather, the gift of the bridegroom. The bridesmaid was Miss Evelyn Moore-Lane (sister of the bride). The best man was Captain George Villiers, brother of the bridegroom, the bride being given away by General W. A. Collings. The officiating clergy were the Rev. Preb. H. Villiers (Vicar of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, uncle of the bridegroom), and the Rev. Canon E. Gardiner (Vicar of Holy Trinity), and the service was fully choral.

On the arrival of the bride at the church, which had been artistically decorated for the occasion, "Benediction Nuptiale" (Guilmant) and "Canzone" (Guilmant) were ably rendered by Mr. R. Bertram Hudson, F.R.C.O., the organist. During the service the hymns, "Lead us, Heavenly Father, lead us," and "O, perfect love, all human thought transcending," were sung by the choir.

After the ceremony the Rev. Preb. H. Villiers read a passage from the Scriptures and the anthem "Love one another," was sung by the choir. As the newly-married couple left the church "The Wedding March" (Mendelssohn) was played.

A reception was afterwards held at the Grand Mansions, numerous friends being entertained, and the happy couple left later in the afternoon for the Continent.

Mr. Vaughan, whose real name is Evelyn Charles Villiers, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Villiers, of The Sheiling, Ayr, N.B., and Closeburn Hall, Dumfries. He has achieved noteworthy success on the stage, having played with Mr. and Mrs. Kendal's company and under Mr. Lewis Waller's management. Mrs. Villiers is the daughter of the late Colonel Howard Moore-Lane and grand-daughter of Admiral De Courcy, and has also gained histrionic honours with the Kendals and Mr. Waller. She was for some time understudying important parts at the Waldorf. Both artists are engaged for the forthcoming autumn tour of John Glayde's Honour, under the auspices of Mr. George Alexander.

The presents were valuable and numerous, and included a substantial number of cheques. The bridegroom's gifts to the bride comprised a set of electric lamps, ventilating fan for dressing-room, gold bracelet, gold watch, diamond ring, diamond and sapphire bracelet, brooch, pendant, diamond and ruby ring, links, buttons, and jewel case; while the bridegroom received from the bride a gold pen, pipes in case, a gold-mounted pocket-book, and a gold ring. We join heartily in the wishes for the future happiness of the newly-wedded pair.

The above new drama, which deals with one of the most eventful and picturesque episodes in English history, is of particular interest to Lancashire people. In Act I., A.D. 1317, Sir William and Lady Mabel Bradshaigh, of Haigh Hall, near Wigan, are holding the birthday revels of the former in the old hall, but are interrupted by the arrival of the King's Messenger, Sir Osmond Nevill, a Welsh knight, with a command from the King for the instant departure of Sir William to the Crusades. Sir Osmond Nevill had been a former suitor of the Lady Mabel, and was now plotting with Parson Adam Cliderhoe to get rid of Sir William and force Lady Mabel into a marriage with him, in order to obtain possession of the Bradshaigh estates. Sir William, under protest, obeys the King's mandate, and amidst a great uproar departs for the Court of London en route to Palestine.

Ten years afterwards, by the treachery of Sir Osmond Nevill and Parson Cliderhoe, Sir William Bradshaigh has been left for dead upon the battlefield in Palestine. Sir Osmond and Cliderhoe have returned to England. The Lady Mabel has been deceived by them and forced into a marriage with the Welsh knight, and the conspirators have obtained possession of the Bradshaigh lands, and reside at the Hall, indulging in riot and oppression. Lady Mabel is kept a close prisoner, and young Richard Bradshaigh (the rightful heir) is brutally treated by Sir Osmond Nevill. At the hostelrie, known as "The Merry Maypole," kept by Giles and Madge Dawber, Sir William Bradshaigh is discovered in the disguise of a pilgrim, and here he learns of the ill-treatment of his wife and son by Sir Osmond Nevill, and departs for Haigh Hall, where he meets his faithful Jester, Humphrey Lathom, by whose help he gains access to Lady Mabel and his son. Their interview is broken in upon by Sir Osmond Nevill and his fellow conspirator, Cliderhoe. Sir William is denounced as an impostor, and is thrown into a dungeon, whilst Lady Mabel is again hurried back to her prison-chamber, leaving the tyrant and the wily Cliderhoe masters of the situation.

In Act III. Sir Osmond and Cliderhoe meet and dispute the terms of the division of their plunder of the Haigh lands. Sir Osmond is compelled to agreed to Cliderhoe's extortionate demands, and a plot is arranged to assassinate Sir William in his prison. This is overheard by "Humpy," who, with the aid of buxom Madge Dawber, the hostess of the Merry Maypole, determines to frustrate it, and in an amusing scene with Madge and Phœbe, the waiting-maid, proposes the plot to them, and they agree to aid him. Sir William and Lady Mabel are rescued from their prisons; but their escape is discovered, and a search is made for the fugitives, who are speedily found; but the Haigh tenants rally round Sir William, and a terrific fight ensues, in which both Sir Osmond Nevill and Cliderhoe are put to flight.

The last Act opens with an amusing comedy scene between Giles Dawber, Madge, and "Humpy," the Jester, whereby we learn that Sir William Bradshaigh is pursuing Sir Osmond and his accomplice, Cliderhoe, towards Newton. The lad Richard then arrives, bearing the news that Lady Mabel has vowed to perform a solemn penance by walking barefooted "from Haigh to Wigan Cross" (thenceforth called "Mab's Cross"). This self-imposed punishment her faithful followers determine to prevent. Meanwhile, Sir William Bradshaigh has overtaken the Welsh Knight and the traitor Cliderhoe, and after a fierce combat in Newton Park, has slain Sir Osmond and captured the villain Cliderhoe. He then returns to Wigan town and finds that Lady Mabel has completed her first penitential journey to the Cross, and straightway forbids the repetition of the undeserved penance. To this Lady Mabel agrees. Thus the noble House of Haigh is once more restored to happiness, and the curtain falls.

The play abounds in many strong situations, and the possibilities for spectacular effect are numerous. Overflow audiences have, during the week, been roused to the highest pitch of interest, and at the close of each performance the players have been received with the surest marks of approval. The "book" is well written, and this stirring and pathetic drama should rank amongst the best of romantic and historical productions of recent years.

In Mr. Roy Fortescue Sir Osmond Nevill has an able and powerful exponent, the duplicity, cunning, and cruelty of the personage being brought out to the full. As Sir William Bradshaigh Mr. John McNally is a distinct success. A fine elocutionist and of good stage presence Mr. McNally infuses into the exposition of the part hope and faithfulness to wife and home on the one hand, and loyalty to his King on the other. Miss Lalla Shelton as the wronged Lady Mabel wins all hearts in her sorrowful resignation; and in the scene wherein her son is flogged by her barbarous "husband" she displays rare histrionic abilities. Miss Olive Lloyd as the young son of Sir William plays the part realistically, and Mr. David Curtis as Parson Adam Cliderhoe imbues the character with all the elements of a crafty, selfish, and sordid disposition. The rôle of Humphrey Lathom, the jester, is played with consummate tact and wit by Mr. Wayton Hope, whose drolleries and by-play with the Dawbers, the quaint and highly-amusing host and hostess of the Merry Maypole Inn, are extremely diverting. The other members of the cast also fulfil their parts creditably.

ACTORS' UNION.

LONDON.

Mr. J. C. TAYLOR occupied the chair at Tuesday's meeting of the Actors' Union, held at the Bedford Head Hotel, Maiden-lane. Others present were Messrs. Geo. Goodwin, Vernon De Ville, Fred Prior, E. Y. Rae, Jack Collinson, H. Irving Loveday, E. H. Templeton, Edwin J. Collins, Arthur St. John, Frank Sutherland, Charles Stafford, Douglas G. Murray, Jas. C. Taylor, Jno. W. Ryder, J. W. Braithwaite, H. Carlyle Pritchard, Orlando Barnett, Roy Barraclough, Francis Chamier, H. Tripp Edgar, Cecil G. Calvert, W. Ruddle Brown, Arthur Bawtree, Kenneth Black, jun., Harry Paulton, Harry Paulton, jun., Howard Cochran, Percy Everard, Grahame Herington, Edward Mervyn, A. Seager, Fred Bentley, Horace Booth, Edward Campbell, Alf Richards, Gerald Merrilees, Albert Hayzen, Will Henry, Alfred Tate, Dennis Bryan, and Thos. Bowes; and Misses Dorothea Mapleson, Hylda Denison, Isa Patterson, Mary Brougham, Georgie Trewman, Mary Bessie, Daisy Halling, Annie Warwick, Grace Garside, Irena Moncrieff, Lilla Nordon, Violet Chamier, Adelaide Gracey, Millie Vere, Mary Conrade, Gladys Ffolliott, Wynne Hanley, Nellie Howitt, Dot Sellby, Marion Bird, Louie L'Estrange, Dora Dent, Patey Trounsell, and Mrs. Horace Booth.

The CHAIRMAN, in opening the proceedings, stated that it was desirable for those who were going on tour this autumn to notify the secretary of the names of the companies, and, if possible, give a tour list, so that they could be communicated with if necessary.

Mr. EDWIN COLLINS referred to the opposition the Union was getting from people who wrote letters in the newspapers under assumed names. The rule in regard to members writing letters to the Press was this: "That if any member be satisfactorily proved to have done, said, or expressed in writing, or caused to be done, said, or expressed in writing, anything calculated to bring discredit upon the Union, the said member was for the first offence to be fined the amount of the entrance-fee, and for the second offence to be asked to resign; and, if refusing to resign, to be expelled." That rule had been passed by members for members, and was not the work of the committee. Men who made attacks upon the Union or members of the Union under a nom de plume in the Press were moral cowards, who had not the courage to come forward and speak their opinions at a meeting. The committee did not object to criticism in the least.

Mr. CECIL CALVERT called upon the members who were going on tour to get as many new recruits as possible. He pointed out that any member had the power to call a meeting wherever he liked. He was glad to note that the membership was increasing.

Mr. HARRY PAULTON said that what they wanted was a sense of unity and enthusiasm from everyone. In regard to the abusive letters which had appeared in the Press, the committee did not intend to depart from their rules, and would not reply to them. They were ready to meet all arguments at the weekly meetings. He was pleased to say that unity prevailed in the committee.

Miss GLADYS FFOLLIOTT spoke in contemptuous terms of the "Nosey Parkers" who were trying to cause trouble among them. It was this species of human being that was ruining the Actors' Association.

Miss DAISY HALLING and Mr. FRANCIS CHAMIER also spoke.

The CHAIRMAN, in his concluding remarks, stated that there was absolutely no dissension in their ranks. It afforded him intense pleasure to know that the Actors' Association seemed willing to join hands with the Union, and he thought that, if such a desirable scheme could materialise, it would make for greater unity in the profession.

The gold medallist of the Guildhall School of Music this year is Vera Wise, a 1906 Associate, a pupil of Mr. Norman Cummings, who has gained the award, with honours, for her proficiency on the pianoforte. The silver medal was taken, with honours, by Miss Nellie Lake, a pupil of Miss Kate Rorke, in elocution; and the bronze medal went to Wallis Bandey, pupil of Mr. John Francis Barnett, for pianoforte. At Brentford County Court on the 19th inst. Mr. John M. Hay sued Mr. Archibald J. Critchell, of Bedford Park, for £12, two weeks' wages in lieu of notice. The plaintiff said he was engaged by the defendant to play the part of Lord Soppington in a piece called Cupid's Market, his contract being signed on paper headed "Birds of Paradise Syndicate." After playing five nights at Bedford the defendant decided not to go on with the tour. The case was originally heard on the 12th inst., when it was stated that the defendant was seriously ill, and in granting an adjournment for a week the judge directed that the money should be paid into court within forty-eight hours. As this direction had not been complied with, his Honour now gave judgment for the plaintiff, Mr. Hay, for the full amount claimed, with costs.

MUSICAL PROGRESS.

The eighteenth annual meeting of the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music took place at Marlborough House on Monday, when the Prince of Wales, in his capacity of president of the Board, occupied the chair. Among those present were Mr. William H. Bigge, chairman of the Board; the Hon. G. W. Spencer Lyttelton, deputy-chairman; Sir Alexander C. Mackenzie, Principal of the Royal Academy of Music; Sir C. Hubert H. Parry, Director of the Royal College of Music; Dr. Eaton Faning, Mr. Ernest Mathews, Mr. Charles Rube, Mr. Franklin Taylor, Sir William McMillan (Sydney), and Mrs. Leach (Gibraltar).

Mr. BIGGE read the report for the year ended April 30, which gave particulars of examinations and awards at home and in the Colonies. The Board regretted the resignation of Sir James Dewar, one of its original members, and stated that the directors of the Royal Academy of Music had elected Mr. Charles Rube to the vacated seat. The present accommodation having proved insufficient for the extended operations of the Board, it had secured the lease of 15, Bedford-square, to which the offices will shortly be removed. The balance-sheet and revenue account, duly audited by Sir Lesley Probyn, showed that the Board is in a satisfactory financial position. By agreement between the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music it had been decided to reduce the reserve fund and limit the balance to be carried forward at the close of each financial year.

In moving the adoption of the report, His ROYAL HIGHNESS said they had every reason to congratulate themselves upon the results achieved during the past year, and which were fully set forth in the report which they had heard read. He might add further that the total number of candidates examined throughout the Empire amounted to 25,413 as against 21,856 in the year 1905-6, and they had not yet received the report from South Africa, which would probably give 1,500. It was satisfactory to hear of the successful manner in which their offer of exhibitions in Australasia had been received, and that the successful exhibitioners would take up their studies at either the Royal Academy or Royal College this year. At the same time new centres had been established in various parts of the Empire.

The Hon. G. W. SPENCER LYTTELTON, deputy-chairman of the Board, seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

His ROYAL HIGHNESS presented medals to the winners and congratulated them on their success. The recipients of the medals were John Younger, Glasgow (harmony), intermediate grade gold medal; Gwenydd Powell, Liverpool (violin), advanced grade gold medal; Jessie C. Stewart, Cardiff (violin), advanced grade silver medal; William Hough, Blackburn (harmony), intermediate grade gold medal; and Ernest Quinton, Birmingham (singing), intermediate grade silver medal.

On the motion of Sir ALEXANDER MACKENZIE, seconded by Sir HUBERT PARRY, a vote of thanks was unanimously accorded to the Prince of Wales for his kindness in presiding at the meeting.

The PRINCE OF WALES also presided at the twenty-fourth annual general meeting of the Corporation of the Royal College of Music, held on Monday, at Marlborough House. Among the members of the Corporation present were: Prince Christian, Viscount Althorp, Lord Farquhar, Lord Tredegar, the Hon. G. W. Spencer Lyttelton, the Hon. R. H. Lyttelton, Sir Edward Hamilton, Sir J. Herbert Marshall, Sir Charles L. Ryan (hon. auditor), Sir Hubert Parry (Director), Mr. Charles Morley (hon. secretary), Mr. Stuart Wortley, M.P., Mr. Lionel Benson, Dr. Eaton Faning, and Mr. Frank Pownal, registrar.

Mr. CHARLES MORLEY having read the annual report of the Council, the PRINCE OF WALES, in moving that the report and accounts be received and adopted, reminded his hearers that the College was on the eve of accomplishing a quarter of a century of its existence, and they had every proof that in all its functions it was manifesting the strength and energy of a vigorous and healthy life. The past year had been one of marked activity in all departments. In performances one opera, seven orchestral concerts, and thirteen chamber concerts had been successfully carried out. In the case of the opera the work chosen was Sir C. V. Stanford's Shamus O'Brien, in which, as was to be expected, the pupils exerted themselves to the utmost in honour of their brilliant conductor. Its success was emphasised by the opinion of Kapellmeister Boris Bruck, who came especially from Breslau for the performance. The unqualified praise which he bestowed upon the manner in which the opera was given was a most gratifying testimony to the eminent position which the College had reached, both as regards its students and the training which they receive. At the orchestral and chamber concerts important works by distinguished composers, and a very great variety of quartets and quintets of the highest standard were produced. The Patron's Fund concert brought forward a number of new works by young British composers, the most important being a Symphony by Mr. Ahn Carse, of the Royal Academy of Music. He had read with much interest of the first gathering of the Royal College Union, which was held during the past year, and that it was increasing largely in membership and prosperity. Such associations must be of the greatest advantage in fostering esprit de corps and keeping old pupils in distant parts of the Empire in touch with the College. At the annual examination the College was honoured by the presence of Madame Albani-Gye, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, Mr. Oscar Beringer, and other eminent musicians as examiners, and he was gratified to learn that their reports on the various branches were most favourable. The entries for the examinations for certificates of associateships were well maintained, and 165 candidates obtained certificates, which was one in excess of the number last year. A great number of appointments had been secured by pupils of the College in the course of the year, and singers and instrumentalists were much in request in every department, whether of serious or light opera, chamber concerts, or at musical performances at private houses. He knew how pleased the King would be to hear that the College continued to flourish, and that they had every reason to believe that there was increasing public confidence in its administration and work.

PRINCE CHRISTIAN seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

The PRINCE OF WALES then presented to Miss Ellen C. Edwards the John Hopkinson and the Challen and Son gold medals for pianoforte playing; to Miss Winifred M. Gardiner, the John Hopkinson silver medal for pianoforte playing; and to Mr. Beckwith the gold medal annually presented by Rajah Sir S. M. Tagore, of Calcutta, for the most generally deserving pupil of the year.

In reply to a vote of thanks, His ROYAL HIGHNESS said he had presided with pleasure over the meeting and listened to what everyone must agree was a most gratifying report of the past year's achievements of the College. Such results could not be attained without strenuous work on the part of both the teaching and the administrative staff. To those he offered his sincere thanks, and especially to their able director, his friend Sir Hubert Parry.

The action entered by the Countess of Rosslyn against Lord Rosslyn was decided in the Court of Session at Edinburgh last Saturday, when a decree of divorce was pronounced.

A NEW ZEALANDER'S NOTIONS.

In a chat with our representative Mr. John Fuller, jun., of John Fuller and Sons, the New Zealand amusement entrepreneurs, says:—"Theatrically speaking, I am more than delighted with my trip to the Continent, London, and my recent tour of the provinces. There is a big difference between the life of a vaudeville artist in New Zealand and Australia when compared with England. At the most, they are only called on to do eight performances a week, and artists with two or three changes can play in the one city for six weeks before being requested to shift to another, and when they do shift all travelling expenses are paid. If we consider, therefore, the number of performances given weekly by English turns, shifting regularly each week—a process that necessitates plenty of 'tipping,' both in front or behind the curtain—why, the vaudeville artist in New Zealand and Australia is in a veritable paradise.

"I cannot but express the great admiration I have for the excellent way the music halls of England are conducted. Generally speaking, they are entirely free from the taint of vulgarity. I am greatly surprised at the arbitrary and clumsy manner in which the London County Council dealt with the Living Statuary question, and when viewing their action, along with Employers' Liability Act, it only goes to show that theatrical managers and proprietors in England should endeavour to emulate Mr. George Alexander, and take a little keener municipal and political interest in the affairs of the country. In New Zealand, the Workers' Compensation Act doesn't apply to artists, and I can assure you that this concession was gained by the hard work of those concerned before the Act was passed in New Zealand, and not left to 'chance.'

"The West-End of London seems to me almost over-supplied with theatres, so that the enormous rent asked, and got, for some of the theatres, will soon come down to normal level. In the provinces I think that vaudeville, in most of the large cities, has reached its limit, and he that invests his money in 'new theatre schemes' is going to lose it quickly. I can see strong indications on the theatrical horizon of the revival of drama, which I think will again take its place in the economics of the playhouse.

"In conclusion, I should like to express my delight at the extreme courtesy I have received during my stay in England from all branches of the English entertaining profession. The people of the old country have warm hearts for Britons beyond the seas. I am leaving for New Zealand, America, Japan, and China, by the Adriatic on the 31st inst., arriving home next December, and thus completing a world's tour."

THE MINIMUM WAGE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—The Council of the Actors' Association have appointed a committee to enquire into the possibility of establishing a minimum or living wage in the theatrical profession.

The committee are anxious to collect all available information bearing on this subject, and they would be glad to hear from any actor or actress, whether members of the A.A. or not, who would be willing to supply them with facts relating to salaries and expenses in the profession.

The committee trust that it will be clearly understood that any communication addressed to them will be treated as strictly private and confidential. The names of the writers will not be divulged.

The contents of the letters will be tabulated and arranged for publication in the report so far as may be necessary to throw light on the subject, but in such a way that it will be impossible for anyone outside the committee to know from whom communications have been received. All the members of the committee pledge themselves to absolute secrecy.

The sort of information which the committee seek to obtain from those who may be willing to write to them may be classified under the following headings:—

1. Length of time in the profession, with dates.
2. Lines of business.
3. London or provincial.
4. Salary per week and number of weeks employed in each year.
5. Annual expenses (please give record for as many years as can be clearly remembered).
6. Views and suggestions—experiences not covered by the above questions.

All letters must be signed, and should be addressed to the Chairman Minimum Wage Committee, care of A.A., 10, King-street, Covent Garden, W.C., and will be opened only by him.—Signed on behalf of the Committee,

F. MORLAND,
Chairman.

10, King-street, Covent Garden, W.C., July 25.

EARLY DANCERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—The article on "Early Actresses" last week I read with considerable interest. The regulations of recent years with regard to age limit of children have their disadvantages, and especially so with dancers. The great art of dancing has suffered materially from the difficulty placed in the way of children starting, as they used to do, when "little dots." Dancers who began when only three years old—like Miss Connie Gilchrist, now Lady Orkney, or Miss Lizzie Maynard with the Vokes Family, at Drury Lane—would be still able to hold their own; and the reason that so many dancers come to us from the Continent is, in my opinion, because of the difficulty placed in the way of those "born dancers" beginning at an early age, when they would have time to acquire their art while they are still young.—Yours faithfully,

J. MAUNDY-GREGORY.

ROYAL OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

Umberto Giordano's opera Andrea Chénier was given on Saturday, July 20, at Covent Garden. The composer's Fedora has already been heard this season, and he was known by his opera Mala Vita when Andrea Chénier was produced at Milan in 1896. Some years ago the Carl Rosa Company first performed this opera, and it was again given in the autumn at Covent Garden in 1905, with Mme. de Cisneros and Signor Sammarco in the cast. The story of Andrea Chénier is founded on the love of a young poet, Andrea Chénier, for a lady of birth, Madeleine de Coigny, and both in the end are victims of the Reign of Terror, the sombre background of the French Revolution forming the chief feature. If not reaching any great point, the music of Giordano is in many instances melodious, and sometimes strikingly dramatic, and the composer often well imparts the storm and stress of the Revolution to his opera, while the dramatic incident of the old woman devoting her grandson to the country's cause is illustrated with appropriate music; there is also much charm in the ball-room scene of the Château de Coigny. The most interesting portions of the opera are the love song of Chénier in the first act, Gérard's soliloquy, and the duets in the second and last acts. The performance on Saturday was in many respects noteworthy. Signor Caruso as Chénier acted and sang grandly, while his picturesque costume of the eighteenth century proved very effective. Mlle. Destinn's fine voice also was displayed to the greatest advantage in the part of Madeleine, and Mme. de Cisneros in the small character of Madelon sang with passionate intensity. Signor Sammarco's fine performance of Gérard was another important feature in the performance, and Mme. Edna Thornton deserves praise for her acting and singing as the Comtesse Coigny. That useful artist M. Gilibert made the most of the part of Mathieu, while Signor Marcoux, Signor Venturini, and Signor Gailetti were successful as Roucher, the Spy, and Fleville. The rest of the long cast was adequately filled, and the clever stage-management, picturesque costumes, and effective scenery deserve special mention. Signor Panizza conducted, and secured an excellent ensemble.

Mme Selma Kurz, who took Mme. Melba's part in Lucia di Lammermoor, given at Covent Garden on Monday last, sang with no little success, being most enthusiastically applauded for her brilliant and artistic rendering of the great mad scene. Signor Bonci again sang Edgardo's music with admirable purity of tone and fervour, while Signor Scotti and M. Journet repeated their former successes. The conductor was Signor Panizza.

LOVERS of golf will welcome the information that the committee of the Blundell Golf Club will give the use of their ground to any professional ladies and gentlemen who may visit Southport at the very low fee of 1s. per day or 4s. per week. The Links are within five minutes' walk of Birkdale Station (a penny fare) and near two tram termini, and there is an excellent nine-hole course, partly meadow-land and partly sandhills. Tickets may be obtained at any time of the groundsman, or of the hon. secretary, Mr. Henry Pidduck, 175, Lord-street, Southport.

ACADEMY OF DRAMATIC ART.

The summer term of the Academy of Dramatic Art, which has just closed, after the examinations, which were held at 62, Gower-street, has been a very prosperous and successful one. The council, including Sir Squire Bancroft (president), Mr. John Hare, Mr. Tree, Mr. George Alexander, Mr. Forbes Robertson, Mr. Cyril Maude, Mr. Arthur Bourchier, Mr. Pinero, and Mr. J. M. Barrie, make the gratifying announcement that the Academy is now firmly established on a sound basis, the financial year lately completed showing the institution to be already more than self-supporting. This is an achievement of which they can feel justly proud, in that it has been accomplished in a very short space of time, and after rejection by the examiners of a considerable number of candidates at the entrance examinations on the ground of an absence of sufficient qualification for stage-work. On a recent occasion, indeed, as much as £500 in fees was refused by the examiners for this reason, as many as fifty per cent. of the candidates failing to pass.

The students have been regularly rehearsed by Mr. Lyall Swete, Mr. Fisher White, and Mr. William Haviland, and special rehearsals, given in a purely honorary way—as, indeed, certain instruction is given by Royal Academicians in the Royal Academy Schools—have been held from time to time by Sir Squire and Lady Bancroft, Mr. John Hare, Mr. George Alexander, Mr. Forbes Robertson, Mr. Cyril Maude, Miss Winifred Emery, Mr. Arthur Bourchier, and Mr. Pinero. Mr. Forbes Robertson, who, after his return from America was taking a well-earned rest in the country, some considerable distance from London, came regularly to conduct these honorary rehearsals.

As many as fifteen different parts had been studied and rehearsed by a number of students during this last term, which concluded with the performance of no less than eighteen one-act plays by the various students without any tuition. For this creative work the prize of five guineas given by Mr. Tree was awarded by the judges to Miss Violet Farebrother; the "Henry Irving Shakespeare," presented by Miss Greta Morritt for the best untaught dramatic rendering of a speech from Shakespeare, being won by Miss Sybil Mockett. The practical result of the students' stage-training is to be found in the fact that lately more professional engagements of the advanced pupils have been made by Mr. John Hare, Mr. George Alexander, Mr. Arthur Bourchier, and Mr. Forbes Robertson.

The next entrance examination, for which early application should be made to Mr. George P. Bancroft, the administrator, at 62, Gower-street, will be held on Sept. 24.

THE case of the musicians Eugene and Théo Ysaye, who were sued for damages for having struck a railway guard in the Antwerp-Brussels train in March last, was concluded by the Antwerp tribunal on Tuesday. Eugene Ysaye was ordered to pay £6 fine for insulting an official, and the two brothers were condemned jointly to £320 damages for having by their action caused the guard to go deaf.

THE FAMOUS NATIVE CHOIR FROM JAMAICA.

A CHAT WITH MR. T. ELLIS JACKSON (THE CONDUCTOR).

To become really famous in the true sense of the word after only being a few months in England is perhaps a record to be proud of, but this has been accomplished by the company of Jamaican singers and dancers who are now touring England giving their charming and sparkling entertainment at our principal theatres, halls, and pier pavilions to the great delight of vast audiences all over the country. The choir consists of twelve coloured ladies and gentlemen, survivors of the terrible earthquake which took place at Kingston, Jamaica, in January last. The members of the choir are all highly educated, and have a very pleasing and attractive manner, and each one is an artist to the finger-tips. Not one of them had ever been outside the West Indies, or even put their foot on a steamer, until they came to England. Truly a very interesting body of people, whose opinion of England must be worth hearing.

"Well, Mr. Jackson, what do you think of England and our audiences?"

"I am delighted and deeply grateful to the English public, not only for their enthusiastic reception of our efforts, but for their great kindness generally. Wherever we go we appear to be singled out for special favours. At Liverpool Lord Elgin (His Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies) was extremely kind and helpful to us in many ways; Lord Derby also paid us a very high compliment; and from Lord Roberts, Lord Brassey, Lord Lathom, Sir Alfred L. Jones and others who all came to see our performances we received every consideration and encouragement; whilst the Lord Mayor of Liverpool gave us a splendid reception at the Town Hall, and presented each member of the company with a gold medal, as we were told we created a unique record in Liverpool by giving thirty-two complete concerts, and money was refused at every performance."

"Your visit to England has certainly turned out very successful. What made you think of leaving the West Indies for our shores?"

"Well," replied Mr. Jackson, "the credit is really due to Dr. James Johnston, a Scotchman, and a noted medical practitioner in Jamaica, who takes a general interest in the advancement of our island; he said he was sure we should be a great success in England. Also to the famous Liverpool shipping magnate, Sir Alfred Jones, whose name is a household word in Jamaica. It is to him that we owe the successful introduction of the bananas into the United Kingdom, and also the revival of the cotton industry. Sir Alfred most kindly brought us all to England by one of his steamers free of charge, and will take us back again at the end of the tour. He has put us in the hands of Messrs. H. E. Jones and A. Douglass, of 21, Water-street, Liverpool, who are acting as our managers and agents. Their attentions have been untiring, and their vast experience has stood us in good stead."

"When do you propose to return to the West Indies, Mr. Jackson?"

"Well, we had intended to return in September, but engagements have poured in upon us. We have just decided to stay in England through the coming winter, and our managers will commence to book winter dates at once, possibly at the music halls, where we are told by those who know that we should be just as enthusiastically received as we have been elsewhere. The fact is, some of our 'turns' are specially to delight the patrons of music halls."

"Do I understand that your summer dates are all taken up?"

"Oh, yes; we were soon booked up to the end of October, although we have two vacant dates in August, these having to be recently cancelled owing to the licence of the New Dover Pavilion and Gardens not having been granted to the lessee. A gratifying feature of our tour has been the great number of return dates offered us, several managers having gone to much trouble to alter their arrangements so as to have us back again this season; but, unfortuntely, we have been compelled to refuse many tempting offers for the summer."

"Do the members of your company all hail from Kingston, Jamaica?"

"Yes, with one exception, and we possess the best voices obtainable in the island. I have two bass singers, four sopranos—one known as the West Indian Patti and winner of several gold medals—two tenors, and one contralto. My accompanist is a pianist of a very high order; and we also possess two real coon singers, both remarkably clever dancers. Our native Jamaican songs and plantation melodies have never before been heard in England, and apparently give great pleasure to our audiences, for they are very lavish in their encores. On Tuesday H.R.H. Princess Henry of Battenberg and party attended our performance at the Pier Pavilion, Southampton, and her Royal Highness expressed her very great delight at our original and unique entertainment."

"You must all have had a trying time in Jamaica during the earthquake?"

"We did, indeed, for it was beyond anything of its kind ever experienced by anyone in the island. No words of mine could adequately express to you the horror of that never-to-be-forgotten day on Jan. 14 last. The members of the company had wonderful escapes from death; many of their relatives and friends were killed, and all the choir lost greatly by the calamity. When we sailed from Kingston after the earthquake we were naturally very depressed and despondent, but, thanks to the kind aid extended by the British Government, we are more cheerful, knowing that our people are being helped out of the trying ordeal passed through seven months ago. Thank God, we can see a hopeful future before us!"

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

Sir Charles Wyndham has decided upon Tuesday next for his revival of A Night Out at the Criterion. Mr. George Giddens will appear in his original part of Joseph Pinglet, and support will be rendered by Messrs. Bertram Steer, Frederick Volpé, George Desmond, Reginald Walter, Lawrence White, F. W. Permain, G. Savile, and P. L. Julian, and Misses Marguerite Leslie, Alice Beet, Frances Vine, Millicent Forsyth, Nell Toller, Violet Hollom, Leonora Caldwell, and May Hollom.

Mr. Edward Terry was present in his capacity of P.G. Treasurer at the annual meeting of the Surrey Grand Lodge of Freemasons on the 18th inst., presided over by Mr. Justice Bucknill, P.G.W. All the lodges of the province were represented, the attendance amounting to something near five hundred.

Mr. Martin Harvey makes the interesting announcement of his intention to appear as Ravenswood next year in a new adaptation by Stephen Phillips of "The Bride of Lammermoor." The most noteworthy adaptation of Scott's romance was that by Herman Merivale, which was produced by Henry Irving at the Lyceum in 1890, with Miss Ellen Terry and the late William Terriss supporting the famous actor. In the latest revival Miss N. de Silva will play Lucy Ashton. Mr. Harvey's autumn tour commences at the Opera House, Buxton, on Aug. 22, and concludes at the Coornet on Dec. 14. Subsequently the popular actor will appear in the West End with a revival of The Corsican Brothers.

Miss Viola Tree was one of the eleven bridesmaids who officiated at the wedding of Mr. Raymond Asquith, son of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, with Miss Katharine Horner, at St. Margaret's, Westminster, on Thursday. Mrs. Beerbohm Tree was also among the distinguished gathering, which included Mr. Asquith and Mr. Balfour.

Mr. Otho Stuart will inaugurate his venture at the Court Theatre on Sept. 25 with a new comedy, in three acts, by W. Gayer Mackay and Robert Ord, entitled Barry Doyle's Rest Cure, a play of a light description designed principally to amuse. The cast will include Messrs. W. Graham Brown, C. M. Lowne, E. W. Garden, A. Holmes Gore, E. Y. Rae, and Misses Carlotta Addison, Rose Musgrove, and Beatrice Terry. Following the custom which his predecessors at the Court found so remunerative, Mr. Stuart will give Tuesday and Friday matinées, the first of which will take place on Oct. 1, when The Incubus, the translation by Mr. Laurence Irving of Brieux's comedy Les Hannetons, will be revived, with Miss Mabel Hackney and Mr. Charles V. France in their original parts, and Mr. Irving himself sustaining that of Brochot.

Mr. Laurence Irving, who performed his translation of Brieux's comedy in a marvellously short period, has turned his attention to Dostoievsky's novel, "Crime and Punishment," and his adaptation has been secured by Mr. E. H. Sothern. Under the title of The Sixth Commandment a version of the same book by the late Robert Buchanan was produced by Mrs. Lancaster Wallis at the Shaftesbury in 1890, with Mr. Lewis Waller, Mr. Herbert Waring, and Miss Elizabeth Robbins in the cast.

Miss Connie Ediss, who has just arrived in New York, is credited with the alarming statement that she intends to make America her home. "I am shaking off London for ever," she is reported to have said to an interviewer, "and shall become an American. Born in Ireland, I shall take out citizen papers here." Miss Ediss is to play the leading rôle in The Girl Behind the Counter, in rehearsal for production at the Herald-square Theatre in August.

Miss Annie Hughes finishes her present successful tour with Miss Tommy, by Jerome K. Jerome, on Aug. 10, and her next tour, which starts on Sept. 9, will extend to Christmas. In the course of her tour Miss Hughes will play Sweet Nancy, and produce a new front piece written by the Rev. Wallace Duthie, rector of Caister, near Great Yarmouth. Miss Hughes, it should be added, has been specially engaged by Mr. Percy Hutchison to play her original part in A Country Mouse at Brighton for the week of Aug. 26.

The vexed question of the minimum wage has been taken up in a practical way by the Actors' Association, the Council of which, as will be seen in a letter in another part of this issue, have appointed a committee to inquire into the matter, and are inviting particulars relating to individual salaries and to the expenses incurred in the pursuit of the profession. The information which the committee seek to obtain includes that of salaries received and the number of weeks employed in the year and a record of annual expenses. All communications are to be treated as strictly private and confidential, and no names will be divulged, either in the report which the committee is to present or elsewhere.

Mr. Henry Kemble has been advised to take a prolonged rest, owing to the indifferent state of his health. It is hoped that it will not be long before this sterling actor is restored to health and to the London stage.

Miss Phyllis Dare will, at Harrogate, on Aug. 3 begin her first provincial tour in musical comedy, and will be seen as Peggy in The Dairymaids, in which she is to sing new numbers specially composed for her by Mr. Paul Rubens. At Christmas she will be the Cinderella of Mr. Courtneidge's pantomime at the Theatre Royal, Birmingham, when she will be associated with Miss Carrie Moore as the Prince and Mr. Dan Rolyat as the Baron. Next spring will see Miss Dare back in London in the leading part of a new musical play upon which Mr. Courtneidge is now engaged.

We regret to announce the death of the well-known scenic artist Robert Burriss, who passed away on the 17th inst. after a long and painful illness. The deceased artist, during his career, had been connected with the West London, the County Theatre, Kingston, the Palace, Clacton, and other establishments. He leaves a widow and three young children. The funeral took place at Woking on Saturday.

Mr. Charles Manners is putting into practice at the Lyric a more merciful system towards latecomers than that of shutting the doors against them. It is now decided that those who arrive after time shall be admitted to the corridors immediately adjacent to the part of the theatre in which their seats are situated, where they can thus listen to the overture without disturbing those who are already seated.

Miss Ida Valli, the clever child actress and mimic, met with a painful accident at Clacton-on-Sea on the 19th inst., when she fell from her bicycle, breaking her ankle. The wheel of a cab which was following immediately behind passed over her hand, which was terribly bruised, but otherwise uninjured, owing to the fact that the wheel had just been re-tyred. The little sufferer was conveyed to the Clacton Cottage Hospital, where she received every possible attention, and is progressing as well as could be expected.

Miss Emma Hutchison and Mr. Percy Hutchison have hit upon an effective means of directing attention to their various enterprises, and have issued a little booklet, containing a list of eight tours under their management. The three companies of Peter's Mother start in August, at Brighton, Buxton, and Margate; The Stronger Sex company will open its tour on August Bank Holiday at Scarborough, with Miss Hutchison in the cast, supported by an exceptionally strong company; and in September another company of this powerful play will be seen at the Coronet, for a tour of the London suburbs, with visits to Nottingham, Glasgow, Edinburgh, &c., to follow. All the arrangements are in the hands of Mr. Percy Hutchison, who also has arranged for a four weeks' season at Brighton, commencing with Peter's Mother for the first week, to be followed by The Freedom of Suzanne, The Stronger Sex, and Miss Annie Hughes in A Country Mouse.

The autumn season of Italian grand opera will begin at Covent Garden on Thursday, Oct. 3, and will last for eight weeks. Amongst the engagements already made are those of Mme. Rina Giachetti and Mme. Maria Gay, who have already won favour at Covent Garden. Tenor rôles will be entrusted to MM. Bassi, Vignas, Carpi, Zucchi, and Bada, and among the basses and baritones will be MM. Sammarco, Deluca, Scandiani, and Thos. Signor Panizza, who has been conducting during the past grand season, has also been engaged, in conjunction with Signor Serafin, who is new to London, but comes with the highest credentials from Milan, Rome, and Naples.

The orchestra will be specially selected from English players, and will be largely drawn from the grand season orchestra. The chorus will also be the same as in the grand season. Performances will be given every evening, except on the nights of the fancy dress balls, which take place every alternate Friday. The prices of boxes will range from 16s. to 4 guineas, the stalls will be 10s. 6d. to 12s. 6d., and other charges will be in proportion, with an unreserved gallery at 1s. 6d.

The race for Doggett's Coat and Badge, which is annually run to perpetuate the name of a celebrated Drury-lane comedian, was duly contested on Wednesday, when the four-and-a-half miles course from London Bridge to Chelsea was covered by the half-dozen competitors. The coveted prize fell to Hammersmith, Alfred Thomas Cook, of that borough, winning a closely-contested race by four lengths.

Messrs. Frank J. Pitt and Charles Halling will conclude this evening at the Theatre Royal, Croydon, their first tour of the late Charles Rogers' detective drama, £1000 Reward, with which they have had a fifty-one weeks' run. The autumn tour will commence at the Grand Theatre, Brighton, on Aug. 5, the piece being fully booked with one or two exceptions up to Christmas, 1908.

The stage in Spain has received somewhat tardy recognition in official circles, the great Spanish actor, Fernando Diaz, having just been made a Grandee. This is the first time an actor has been ennobled in Spain.

"Tom Jones" will on Saturday next terminate its present run at the Apollo, after which the piece will be sent on tour, beginning at the Grand Theatre, Blackpool, on Aug. 9. The company which Mr. Courtneidge is sending out will include Miss Ruth Vincent as Sophia, Miss Carrie Moore as Honour, and Mr. Dan Rolyat at Partridge. Tom Jones will be revived next spring at a West End theatre, at present in negotiation.

Mr. Frank Lindo will on Monday celebrate the 1,000th performance of his successful play, Home, Sweet Home, at the Theatre Royal, Leeds. The piece was produced at Greenwich in the May of 1903, and has since enjoyed a measure of prosperity upon which the author is to be congratulated.

Mr. Wentworth Croke has purchased the entire productions of The Bondman and The Prodigal Son from Drury Lane for his forthcoming autumn tours, and playgoers in the suburbs and provinces will thus have an opportunity of seeing the same magnificent and correct productions as those which delighted the London public. Mr. Croke has been fortunate in securing the services of Miss Grace Chalmers, who has been specially chosen by Mr. Hall Caine to play Greeba in The Bondman, and will make her first suburban appearance in that character at the Broadway Theatre on Aug. 26.

Mr. Croke's Christian company commences its ninth year of tour on August Bank Holiday at the Theatre Royal, Birmingham. The piece will enter upon another year of prosperity with a new production throughout.

The Fulham Theatre, thoroughly cleaned and redecorated, will be reopened on August Bank Holiday by Miss Ida Molesworth and Mr. Mark Blow's company in a play, new to England, entitled For Her Sake. The piece was originally produced in America, where it has been represented by no less than four companies for the last six years, and is still playing to large business. The subject is Russian, and furnishes vivid pictures of Muscovite aristocracy, military and diplomatic life, and the sulphur mines of Siberia.

Mr. Charles Windermere has disposed of two of his one-act plays to Mr. Frank Thornton, who will produce them in front of When Knights were Bold on his forthcoming Australian tour. Mr. Windermere is now appearing, with much success, in his original duologues in the variety theatres, assisted by that clever young actress, Miss Clare Manifield.

Miss Maud Buchanan, who has just finished a successful tour as Sarah Drake in Man's Enemy with Mr. Hartwell J. Kirby, has been engaged by Messrs. A. J. Harding and Charles R. Hann for the lead in Delivered from Evil.

The beautiful new theatre at the Spa, Bridlington, which Mrs. Tree will open on Monday, is to have as its Bank Holiday attraction that vivid picture of German Army life, the successful play, Lights Out, with an exceptionally strong cast.

The Lyric Theatre and Opera House, Hammersmith, owing to the extensive alterations imposed upon the proprietors by the L.C.C., closes to-day. The date of reopening, and by whom it will be reopened, is not at present known, but Mr. Samuel James is leaving, and transferring his personal interest to the Theatre Royal, Croydon, proprietorate. Mr. Newman Maurice, the resident-manager, terminates his engagement at Hammersmith, and rejoins Messrs. W. and T. Melville on August 5.

Mr. Tom H. Solly, the popular stage manager and comedian of the Alhambra Dramatic Company, Belfast, was accorded a complimentary benefit on the 18th inst. The programme comprised the drama, Shadow of a Crime; and special turns were furnished by Dandie George and his dog "Rosie," Frank Cumminger, Walton and Lester, Percy Curry, Elton and Edwin. The performance concluded with the farcical sketch Turn Him Out, the various rôles being capitally sustained by Miss Mattie Crawford, Miss Alice Clarke; Messrs Cyril Grier, Ed. Smythe, Elmore Frith, and Tom H. Solly. During the evening Mr. Sinclair Neill, manager of the Alhambra, on behalf of Mr. Solly's numerous admirers, presented him with a large crayon drawing of himself, suitably framed, together with a handsome cigarette-holder and case.

Mr. Mulholland writes, calling attention to the fact that the Lyceum Theatre is not the only theatre in London that has a sliding roof. There is one called the King's, he tells us, down Hammersmith way, which he believes was the first theatre in London at all events to enjoy this luxury—or necessity.

The Council of the Actors' Association held their weekly meeting on Tuesday, when there were present Mr. Fredk. Morland (in the chair), Mr. Henry W. Mote (Hon. Solicitor), Miss Wynne Matthison, Messrs. Arthur Applin, Cecil Brooking, Fewlass Llewellyn, and Roy Horniman, and Chas. Cruikshanks (Secretary).

The Finance and General Purposes Committee met for the purpose of carrying on the business of the Council. Mr. Fredk. Morland was elected to the chair. Miss Wynne Matthison and Mr. Arthur Applin were elected members of this committee. The Hon. Solicitors reported they had had an interview with a member, and advised him that they had written to another member in reply to a letter advising him. There was some discussion on the subject of the agency, and it was agreed that the Secretary exhibit the following notice:—"The attention of members seeking work is called to the 'Disengaged' forms, which all desiring engagements should fill up and hand to the Agency Clerk."

The Touring Managers' Association submitted a revised form of contract for approval, and the Secretary was directed to return the contract suggesting certain alterations. The Secretary of the Sun Fire Office inquired as to insurance of staff, and the Secretary was directed to ask for quotation to cover all risks. The resignation of Mr. Fredk. Mouillot as life member was accepted with regret. The Secretary was directed to exhibit a notice that—"No messages are to be written in the visitors' book, it being intended for signatures only." Laura Vale was nominated for election to the A.A., and three former members were reinstated.

M. Auguste van Biene commences on Aug. 19 at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, his autumn tour of The Broken Melody, which is now approaching its 5,000th performance, and in January, 1908, will resume his Moss-Stoll tours with his successful playlet, The Master Musician. It is M. Van Biene's intention in future to divide the year into two halves, one of which will see him in the theatres and the other in the halls.

Mr. F. R. Benson is sending out a fourth company, to be called the "Midlands" Company, which will start on Sept. 19, and will tour until Dec. 14.

The Rev. J. Stephen Barrass, rector of St. Lawrence Jewry, Gresham-street, E.C., has accepted the post of hon. chaplain for Central London to the Actors' Church Union. The district includes all the leading West End theatres and halls. The object of the Union is to unite in religious work and life the men and women members of the Anglican communion who are engaged upon the theatrical and variety stage. Mr. Barrass will gladly furnish information respectnig the Union to members of the profession who wish it.

Mr. Julian Bainbridge has just concluded a stock season at the Waterloo Theatre, Whitby, which has not been used for the purposes of entertainment since, some twenty-five years ago, it was the favourite resort of local theatre-goers under the title of the Star Theatre. Mr. Bainbridge has carried out extensive alterations, comprising an electric-light installation, and his enterprise has received most satisfactory patronage, including that of the Rev. Marquis and Marchioness of Normanby, who attended a fashionable performance of Our Boys, given for the benefit of the Whitby Cottage Hospital. Mr. Bainbridge intends to keep open throughout the year, as there is every prospect, when the new harbour bridge is built, of shipbuilding being restarted, thus enabling this old-world town, so long dead to the theatrical world, to be restored to its once flourishing condition. Some first-class attractions are booked for the autumn.

Mrs. Wyn Weaver (Miss Mabel Mellor), we are glad to hear, is now entirely recovered from her severe illness, and anxious to resume work. Miss Mellor was very successful with Mr. W. S. Penley as Donna Lucia, with Mr. Milton Bode as Mme. Camembert in The French Maid, and more recently as Anne Dulley with Mr. H. F. Maltby in The Youngest of Three. Her Mrs. Fritchley, the landlady in The Sportsman, was also a noteworthy impersonation, and her ambition is to earn a reputation in this class of character in town.

Miss Ellen Snow will commence a lengthy tour at the Grand Theatre, Brighton, on Monday next, when she will revive the well-known romantic drama, Why Men Love Women, one of the most successful of the many plays Mr. Walter Howard has written, Miss Snow having secured the touring rights from Messrs. Paumier and Howard. A very strong company has been engaged, including Messrs. Hillard Vox, Lionel Gadsden, Gerald Kennedy, Martin B. Pedler, Harwood Roberts, Claude Aymond, Misses Beatrice Shirley, Mildred Eversleigh, Nita Owen, and Freda Vaughan. Miss Snow will play the leading part of Violet Livingstone. Entirely new scenery has been painted, and magnificent costumes and uniforms provided, and Mr. Howard is rehearsing and producing the play himself. The tour is under the direction of Mr. Stanley B. Farbridge.

Miss Hilda Hammerton, who recently played the character of a sea-maiden at the Vaudeville Theatre, owes her life to the bravery and promptitude of a gentleman at Hastings, but for whose timely assistance she would have been drowned. Miss Hammerton was bathing some way beyond her depth, when she was seized with cramp and sank. A gentleman at once dived from the pier, reached the lady just as she was sinking for the second time, and held her up until the boats arrived.

The Comedy, which closes this evening, will reopen on Sept. 2 with Mr. Clyde Fitch's comedy The Truth, which has maintained a career of steady prosperity. A few weeks later Mr. Alfred Sutro's new play, The Barrier, will be produced, with Miss Marie Tempest in the cast, supported by Mr. Allan Aynesworth, Mr. A. E. Matthews, Mr. Michael Sherbrooke, Mr. Dawson Millward, Miss Geraldine Olliffe, Miss Jean Harkness, and Miss Lillah McCarthy.

Mr. T. Edward Ward commences touring operations after a summer vacation with his latest venture, Second to None, a story of the Royal Scots Greys, on Monday next, at the Prince's Theatre, Portsmouth. There are practically no breaks in the tour, which extends to Christmas, 1908. In fact, the play, which is not only the latest of Mr. Howard's, but undoubtedly one of the best will most likely be exploited by two companies after Christmas.

"The Drums of Oude," the little play which has enjoyed a large measure of popularity at the Playhouse, is to be replaced shortly by an English version, prepared by Mr. Gaston Mayer, of Tristan Bernard's amusing comedietta L'Anglais tel qu'on parle. Mr. Maude has already distinguished himself among French players in the part of the Englishman, of which he made an excellent character-study. When the little piece is performed at the Playhouse the part of the interpreter will be allotted to Mr. George Shelton.

Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M.P., opened on Monday afternoon the Pickwick Exhibition which is being held at the New Dudley Gallery under the auspices of the Dickens Fellowship. "One of the finest things of the 'Pickwick Papers,'" said Mr. O'Connor, in the course of his interesting address, "is that it gave a real life-like and true picture of that most misunderstood of human beings, the typical John Bull. We all know the general impression of John Bull, especially among foreigners who don't know him—his frigidity, his seriousness and occasionally, among unfavourable critics, his supposed Pharisaism and hypocrisy. We who know him from the inside know that a more good-humoured and kindly creature doesn't exist in the world than the typical Englishman, and all that kindness and love and good humour are typified in the immortal Mr. Pickwick."

Mr. Norman V. Norman's season of pastoral plays at Bournemouth was a success in every way. Vast crowds attended every performance, and a great number of people were unable to obtain seats at all. The Winter Gardens were beautifully decorated, the music was played by Dan Godfrey's celebrated band, and the Steinway Quartette sang glees between the acts. Mr. Norman and Miss Beatrice Wilson received quite an ovation on the last night of the season.

Mr. Bannister Howard is evidently a believer in strengthening the bonds that link the Colonies and the Mother Country. In his The Belle of New York company, which opens at the Theatre Royal, Portsmouth, on Aug. 5, he has no fewer than five Australians—Mr. Ernest Mozar, who plays Harry Bronson; Miss Olive Lenton, who embodies Fifi; Miss Winnie Browne, the Cora; Mr. James Watts, the Count Patsi; and Miss Daisee Jennings, the Pansy.

Messrs. Savery and Pigott having acquired the suburban and provincial rights of The English Rose, Harbour Lights, and In the Ranks, the two former of these old Adelphi favourites will be sent out on the road next Christmas, and In the Ranks a little later.

Mrs. Patrick Campbell will commence an autumn tour on Aug. 5 at the Opera House, Blackpool, with a répertoire consisting of The Second Mrs. Tanqueray, Magda, and Hedda Gabler. The tour will be for twelve weeks, in the course of which the principal towns in the provinces will be visited, and will terminate at the Gaiety Theatre, Dublin, on Oct. 26. Miss Stella Patrick Campbell will accompany her mother, playing in The Second Mrs. Tanqueray and in Magda, and the company will include Mr. Charles Garry, Mr. Julian Royce, Mr. Alfred Goddard, Mr. James Gelderd, Miss Margaret Watson, Miss Catherine Dupont, Miss Helen Boucher, Miss Doris Digby, Miss Blanche Wilmot, &c. Mr. E. H. Kelly will be the stage-manager and Mr. H. J. Wilde the business manager.

Mr. Harold West has been engaged by Mr. Leonard Boyne for his forthcoming tour of Raffles.

Mr. Percy Marshall has been engaged by Mr. Robert Courtneidge to play Dr. O'Bryne in his No. 1 Dairymaids tour.

Miss Mab Paul, who will be remembered as the Beatrice of the late Sir Henry Irving's production of Dante, both in England and America, will play the principal part in the forthcoming tour of Mr. Weedon Grossmith's funny farce, The Night of the Party. Miss Paul, who has also appeared with Mr. Beerbohm Tree and Mr. Charles Hawtrey, has been thrice "hung" in the Royal Academy. She is at present negotiating for a London theatre, where she intends to produce a new play by a well-known author at the conclusion of the tour.

Mr. and Mrs. Calvert Routledge open their new theatre at Barrow on August Bank Holiday with Mr. James Welch's company, in When Knights Were Bold, and have all the best companies booked during the autumn. His Majesty's has been converted into one of the most modern and up-to-date theatres in the provinces, and the enterprising lessees' former successes in Barrow are in a fair way of being greatly exceeded.

"Brewster's Millions,' which will make way at the Hicks Theatre on Aug. 26 for Mr. H. A. Jones's Hypocrites, will find accommodation at the Duke of York's. The transference will be marked by the production of a new curtain-raiser called A Little Japanese Girl, in which Miss Pauline Chase, Mr. Edward Sass, Mr. Percival Stevens, and Miss Jane May will be seen.

Miss Fanny Dango, who is the youngest sister of the celebrated family that includes Miss Letty Lind, Miss Millie Hylton, Miss Adelaide Astor (Mrs. George Grossmith, jun.), and Miss Lydia Flopp, left Victoria Station on Thursday for Australia, travelling via Marseilles, where she will join the s.s. Mongolia. Miss Dango had a send-off from many of her friends, and the whole of her family. She has been engaged by Mr. Williamson for twelve months to play leading parts in his various companies, opening in the part of Peggy in The Dairymaids.

Miss Mabelle F. Barlow, who has won such high commendation for her rendering of Lady Godiva in Mr. Max Goldberg's play on tour, "dresses" the part in a manner which might serve as a model for the promoters of the Coventry pageant. Recently Miss Barlow was presented with an old Coventry halfpenny dated 1729, bearing the city arms and the figure of Godiva on the horse—a similar coin to that which it is reported La Milo is to wear "for luck" during her forthcoming ride.

Miss Lydia Flopp has been engaged by Mr. Chas. Macdona, and will open on Monday at Southend in The Cingalee.

At Westminster County Court on the 19th inst. Miss Madge McIntosh, the well-known actress, was sued by Messrs. Miles and Co., printers, for the balance of an account for the printing of certain theatrical posters. The manager of the plaintiff firm said that Mr. Lumsden Hare called on him and said that Miss McIntosh and he were going on tour with one of Sutro's plays, Mollentrave on Women, and wanted some printing done. Certain work was ordered, and defendant and Mr. Hare agreed to take 300 large lithographed posters at 3s. 3d. each and a number of double-crown posters at 4s. 6d. a hundred. These latter were afterwards changed to pictorial posters at 12s. 6d. per 100. Defendant had had supplied to her 140 posters, and it was in respect of the balance of 160 that defendant was now sued.

Mr. Lumsden Hare and Miss McIntosh denied that there was any guarantee on their part to take 300, as the arrangement was that the plaintiffs should supply copies of the large poster as they were required. At the time of the order only four towns on the tour were booked. The design on the large lithographed poster, it was contended, was one chosen from stock, and represented Cupid shooting at a heart. Defendant also disputed a claim for certain slips with the names of the theatres at the various towns at which defendant was to perform. Judge Woodfall found for the plaintiffs as regarded the large lithographed posters for £25 16s. 9d., but for the defendant in respect of the slips and the double-crown bills.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

Mr. Compton on "Stock."

"The touring company," says Mr. Edward Compton in an interview in the Chronicle, "grew out of the 'starring' system. It originated not, as is generally thought, with the tours of the Robertson plays, but almost accidentally by a visit of Buckstone and the whole Haymarket company to open a theatre at Bradford. Their performances were so successful that the visit was repeated, other companies were sent out from London, and from that the whole touring business, with all its evils—and merits—is to be dated. Certainly it encouraged versatility, breadth, and all-round competence. It was—for, say, three or four years—a splendid training for the young actor. He had to work hard. He had to appear in hundreds of small parts. He saw most of the great actors in their famous characters.

Killing Work.

"At the same time, it was not by any means so ideal an arrangement as some would have it. In the first place, directly an actor arrived at a position where he would take fairly big parts, the work began to be positively killing. In any Shakespearian or well-known play it was supposed to be taken for granted that he knew every part that was in his 'line.' Many was the time that I myself, as leading man of a stock company, have pretended to know a long part that I had never seen before, because it would have meant disgrace, if not dismissal, to have confessed ignorance. This meant working up to all hours of the night. Indeed, I hardly ever used to get to bed in those days before two in the morning—and it was work all the time."

Altogether, there is much to be said on either side. There is, I fancy, more finesse, more individuality, occasionally more personal sincerity, about our present-day acting. Above all, the mise-en-scène has vastly improved. The great lack, of course, is the lack of training, which is the great question of the future.

Advance Booking.

Sir Edward Moss, says the Weekly Dispatch, was, a few years ago, shortly after he was first made a magistrate for Midlothian, on the bench one day when a hulking ruffian was brought before him on a charge of wife-beating. After the case was proved Sir Edward (he was then Mr. Moss) told the scoundrel he was very glad to have the opportunity of punishing him severely. "I will give you the full limit that the law allows me," he said; "three months' hard labour; and I am only sorry I cannot book you for the whole tour."

Real Blood.

Our old genial friend Frank Fillis, says the Times of Natal in a recent issue, is nothing if not fond of a dramatic situation. The other night he was giving a performance in Pretoria of Intercepted Dispatches, during which he is shot and falls heavily to the ground. On this occasion he met with a slight accident. He had a drawn sword in his hand, and as he came down the point stuck in the ground, the hilt jabbing him under the ear, inflicting a flesh wound. Taking full advantage of the incident, he staunched the blood, which was flowing copiously, with his hand, while the audience cheered themselves hoarse, being fully convinced that they were witnessing a remarkably realistic piece of stage by-play. It might, however, have been more serious, but fortunately, when the wound was dressed, Frank was none the worse.

The "Star" System.

To know exactly what operas people want, says the Tribune, is the chief thing that the entrepreneur who wishes to make money wants to know. For it is not unlikely that with the disappearance to richer climes of the all-attractive Caruso, the "star system" may receive, if not its death-blow in England, at any rate a shrewd knock from which it will reel for many a day. Then the question for the opera-goer will be, not "What singer shall I go to hear?" but "What opera among all these operas that I want to hear shall I choose?" So the composers may come by their own, and the grateful thanks of subscribers be given first to the maker of the music and only in the second place to its interpreters.

Funny, not Philosophical.

Men laugh, says Mr. Spenser Wilkinson in the Morning Post, not when they will, but when they must. They cannot laugh at an incongruity which they do not perceive. A tall man going about in a little boy's coat and trousers would probably in England be ridiculous. But in unexplored Africa he would be received with perfect gravity, because the people there, not knowing the type of his clothes, would not be aware that they were a misfit. An audience that laughs with an author exposing shams proves that it recognises as sham what the author presents as shams, and agrees with him as to what is real and what not. Accordingly, to make an institution ridiculous is to deal its death-blow, and to make people laugh at an idea supposed to be established is to show that it has been disestablished—has sunk to the level of a convention or a prejudice. But in Mr. Bernard Shaw's plays, though the audience is constantly convulsed with laughter, the laugh, so far as I can discover, is not at the ideas or institutions which Mr. Shaw as a pamphleteer attacks, but at the irresistibly funny situations which he creates and at the clever sayings which he puts into the mouths of his characters. Mr. Shaw is labouring under the delusion that his audiences are laughing at institutions and ideas, whereas they are laughing only at his wit. His mission to preach led him to put on the cap and bells, but the jester's trade threatens to absorb him.

An Empty Outcry.

The cry against the modern theatre, the shallowness of its entertainment, says the Sydney Lone Hand, still comes from the precious few who cherish ideals of dramatic art. But without effect. What is lost sight of is that the decadence of the drama is not really due to a specific mental malady; it is a symptom of a widespread intellectual tendency. The mind of yesterday devoted itself partly to the arts and graces of life. The mind of to-day devotes itself wholly to business.

Over the "Century."

"Nowadays," says the Daily Chronicle, "it is generally understood that a piece must run one hundred performances before the manager hopes to recover the money he has spent on the production, and the following therefore are the thirteen plays that have paid this season, with the theatre and number of performances:—Nelly Neil, Aldwych, 107; John Glayde's Honour, St. James's, 138; The Stronger Sex, Royalty, 153; Robin Hood, Lyric, 162; The Lady Dandies, Daly's, 196; The Morals of Marcus, Garrick, 198; Amasis, Criterion, 200; The New Aladdin, Gaiety, 203; Toddles, Duke of York's, 335; The Beauty of Bath, Hicks, 342; Raffles, Comedy, 353; His House in Order, St. James's, 428; and The Belle of Mayfair, Vaudeville, 432."

Well Prepared.

Some people, says the Daily News, look longingly back to the old-fashioned concerts before Wagner and other composers dominated the programme. There is a story of an elderly man who disliked the rather noisy orchestral concerts to which his daughters dragged him. He called out one evening to them: "What a time you girls take to get ready for a concert. Look at me: I put a large piece of wadding in each ear, and am perfectly ready!"

"THE POCKET MISS HERCULES."

Lord Dyderdown .....MR. H. ATHOL FORDE
Hon. Ferdinand Falarope .....MR. FRED WRIGHT, JUN.
Rev. Septimus Falarope.....MR. CECIL BURT
Dick Power .....MR. NORMAN TREVOR
Meakin .....MR. HUBERT DRUCE
Thomas .....MR. ARTHUR ELDRED
Hon. Sophia Falarope .....MISS ISABEL GREY
Muriel Falarope .....MISS DAISY ATHERTON
Daisy Faye .....MISS ESME HUBBARD

The Follies having concluded their successful engagement at the New Royalty Theatre, the lessee and manager of which is Mr. Tom B. Davis, Mr. Hubert Druce presented there, on Tuesday, the farce in three acts by J. Storer Clouston, entitled The Pocket Miss Hercules. The piece, which was first seen at a matinée in aid of the Grosvenor Hospital for Women and Children, at the New Royalty Theatre, on June 28, is an instance of an amusing edifice being erected on very slight foundations. The "motive" of the fun is a young lady, of no abnormal physical powers, being mistaken for a "strong woman" from the variety stage. The impecunious Lord Dyderdown is anxious that his silly son, Ferdinand, shall marry his cousin, Daisy Faye, who has recently come into a large fortune. Daisy has been a dressmaker, and, in order to conceal her antecedents from her aristocratic relatives, she gets the report spread that she has been a certain "Samsonia," of muscular and athletic fame. When Daisy arrives at Dyderdown Court everyone is in awe of her prowess, and she keeps up the error by making the butler her accomplice, so that he submits to be thrown down by her and thrashed. By terrorising Ferdinand, Lord Dyderdown, and his brother, the Rev. Septimus Falarope, she gets each of them to propose to her, the butler photographing them in ridiculous attitudes. The lively young lady meets her match, however, in a young man named Power, who is not afraid of her muscles; and she falls in love with him and accepts his offer of marriage, the Hon. Ferdinand being left to pair off with the daughter of the Rev. Septimus, whom he has loved from the first.

The acting was of a superior order; indeed, though the incidents of the play were farcical, the characterisation was capital comedy. Mr. H. Athol Forde's Lord Dyderdown was an excellent embodiment. By dint of taking the personage quite seriously, and endowing him with a peculiarly "throaty" voice,' an autocratic manner, and solemn self-importance, Mr. Forde managed to be absolutely convincing and impressive. Not only was the work done by this able actor effective in itself, the fun of the play gained immensely by the sense of reality which was supplied by Mr. Forde's clever creation. The ironic utterances of Lord Dyderdown came from Mr. Forde's lips with so much earnestness that they seemed doubly diverting from the unconsciousness of the speaker. Mr. Fred Wright, jun., added to his interpretation of the Hon. Ferdinand Falarope just a touch of farcical drollery; but he kept his tendency to caricature well within control, and his inane aristocrat was a perfectly possible and very absurd impersonation. Excessively amusing was his depiction of Ferdinand's dread of the physical strength of his fiancée; and the weak, irritable character of Lord Dyderdown's offspring was very drolly delineated. Roars of laughter were evoked by Mr. Wright, jun.'s, performance, which was intensely amusing, his funny business proving quite irresistible. Mr. Cecil Burt's Rev. Septimus Falarope was the ideal of a corpulent and "comfortable" clergyman. He looked the part to the life, and played it with a fidelity to the type depicted which was worthy of the warmest praise. It was a performance which would not have disgraced a first-class modern comedy. Mr. Norman Trevor was a fine manly exponent of the part of Dick Power, acting with gentlemanlike repose, yet with sufficient earnestness and energy. Mr. Hubert Druce's Meakin was a delightful study of benign butlerdom. The arched eyebrows, the sparse hair, carefully plastered across the poll, the slight corpulence, and the admirably "superior" air, all added to the effect of this really well-studied and completely successful impersonation. Very faithful and natural, too, was Mr. Arthur Eldred's reading of the little rôle of Thomas. Mr. Eldred managed, by the aid of a suitable personality, to exactly hit off the characteristics of the individual and the class. Miss Isabel Grey did all that was necessary with the character of the Hon. Sophia Falarope, being sufficiently magnificent, and yet adroitly suggesting the worldly meanness of the elderly aristocrat. Miss Daisy Atherton was most appropriately cast as Muriel Falarope, acting with a brisk alertness and resolute energy which were very acceptable, and looking the 'cute, matter-of-fact young lady to the life. Miss Esmé Hubbard scored a thorough success as Daisy Faye, the large-hearted, ingenuous, and outspoken little milliner being represented by Miss Hubbard with a freedom, a vivacity, and a genial humour that won the heart of the audience from the outset, and made her a great favourite. Miss Hubbard hit the happy mean between making Daisy too vulgar and omitting the racy flavour due to her origin and experiences; and the result was a most amusing and artistic piece of acting. Miss Hubbard was, of course, the mainstay of the production, and Mr. Hubert Druce was fortunate in securing so pleasing, clever, and popular an artist to sustain the leading part in Mr. Storer Clouston's play. It went capitally at the Royalty on Tuesday evening, every point being echoed by a burst of responsive laughter; and the enthusiasm at the close was as demonstrative as it was well-deserved. The Pocket Miss Hercules was preceded by a comedietta in one act by Barton White, performed for the first time, and entitled

"THE SECOND MRS. GRUNDY."

Jerry Grundy .....MR. W. T. LOVELL

It was surprising what an amount of amusement the author and actors managed to extract in this case from very slight and simple materials. Jerry Grundy, an artist who has rented a little cottage on a Welsh mountain, is unexpectedly visited by his old love, Phyllis Hewitt, to whom he was only prevented from proposing, four years since, by his poverty. He is now in better circumstances, and is delighted when a sprained ankle forces Phyllis to take refuge in his abode. A thick fog prevents him from going and seeking assistance; and Phyllis is in great distress, as it seems likely that she will have to pass the night under Jerry's roof. In order to calm her apprehensions, he tells her that he is married, and that Mrs. Grundy is in the next room asleep. In the attempt to maintain the imposture he makes various blunders of a ridiculous and entertaining nature. Phyllis, believing his statements as to his marriage, resolves to accept another admirer. This leads to a proposal on the part of the jealous Jerry, and a confession of his innocent imposture. Phyllis is appeased, the fog clears up opportunely, and a rescue party arrives to carry the young lady home. Miss Daisy Atherton and Mr. W. T. Lovell made the most of their parts in the little piece, Miss Atherton enacting Phyllis Hewitt with a nice mixture of delicacy and sincere sentiment; and Mr. W. T. Lovell—an excellent actor to whom nothing comes amiss—being very alert and amusing as Jerry Grundy. The scenery by Mr. W. T. Hemsley was nicely painted, and both pieces had evidently been well rehearsed.

"CHARLIE, THE SPORT."

Charlie, the Sport .....MR. H. C. BUCKLER
Harry, the Swell .....MR. E. W. TARVER
Billy, the Kid .....MR. HARRY NORTON
Inspector Williams..MR. MONTAGUE ELPHINSTONE
Mr. Sharpe .....MR. DOUGLAS MUNRO
Barnes .....MR. ARTHUR ACKERMAN
Nigger Minstrels.....MR. PERCIVAL CLARK, MR. ALFRED BELLEW
A Young Man .....MR. PATRIC CURWEN
Jennie .....MISS RHODA RAY
An Old Lady .....MISS LYDIA RACHEL
A Gipsy .....MISS ADELAIDE BURT

My Wife still continues its successful career at the Haymarket, and a new first piece was put on there in front of My Wife on Thursday. The hero of M. Tristan Bernard's play, as adapted by Mr. Michael Morton, is a racecourse pickpocket named Charlie. He is deeply in love with Jennie, a showy girl whose real affections are fixed on Harry, a member of the "swell mob." When Charlie finds out to whom his "donah's" heart is really given he makes a desperate appeal to her, which is sternly rejected. A racecourse "sharp," one Billy, suggests to Charlie to revenge himself by getting Harry "pinched" and imprisoned. A detective, learning that some bank-notes have been stolen from the coat of a jockey, induces him to leave the garment on a seat, while he—the detective—keeps watch from behind a fence. Harry is about to fall into the trap, and search the pockets of the coat; but at the last moment Charlie, realising that Harry's arrest will break Jennie's heart, gives the signal of danger used by the gang, and saves Harry, afterwards breaking down in tears.

The production was remarkable for the careful and effective embodiment of the various characters by a competent cast. Mr. H. C. Buckler as Charlie managed, while indicating the loose and reckless nature of the pickpocket, to suggest a depth of passion and purity of sentiment in strong contrast with the general idea of the thief. In the earlier part of the play he was as gay and careless as possible; in the scenes in which Charlie's agony of disappointed love had to be shown Mr. Buckler was extremely powerful; and the tension which the thief endures when unresolved whether to let his rival be incriminated and captured was very strongly shown by Mr. Buckler, whose performance throughout was striking, earnest, and effective. Mr. E. W. Tarver, admirably costumed, hit off the cynical sharpness of Harry very cleverly; and Mr. Harry Norton, whose appearance alone was quite comical, acted with ability as Billy. A performance of real merit was Miss Rhoda Ray's Jennie. It was full of character, and endowed with a sharp, quaint intensity which was entirely appropriate. Mr. Montague Elphinstone did useful and careful work as Inspector Williams; and Mr. Douglas Munro was seen to advantage as Mr. Sharpe, Mr. Arthur Ackerman being commendable for his acting in the little part of Barnes. Mr. Percival Clark and Mr. Alfred Bellew were a pair of most realistic nigger minstrels; and Mr. Patric Curwen did useful work as a Young Man. Miss Lydia Rachel made the most of the brief rôle of the Old Lady; and Miss Adelaide Burt was a picturesque Gipsy. The effect of the piece was increased by the excellent dressing and mounting, Mr. Walter Hann's rural set being both pretty and convincing. To Mr. H. Norton's attentive stage-management may be ascribed the smoothness of the production, which was warmly received, the curtain being raised again and again at the conclusion in response to repeated applause.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

At Queen's Hall, on Friday afternoon, July 19, the Royal Academy gave their annual distribution of prizes to the successful students, who this year received their awards from the hands of His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, President of the Royal Academy of Music. His Royal Highness was supported by the Earl of Shaftesbury, Lord Alverstone, Lord Collins, Lord Strathcona, Sir James Dewar, and Sir Alexander Mackenzie. As in former years, the proceedings commenced with a short concert. The National Anthem being sung. Bach-Gounod's "Meditation," for violins, harps, and organ, was played, Master Stanelli de Groot skilfully undertaking the solo violin. A spirited performance of Ries' Moto Perpetuo, for thirty-five violins, conducted by Mr. Hans Wessely, was also warmly greeted by the large audience; and Miss Myra Hess greatly distinguished herself in Moszkowski's pianoforte solo, Tarantelle. The short concert concluded with three part songs, "Look Upward," Reinecke, "Romance," Corder, and "Come, sisters, come," Mackenzie, sung by the female choir, conducted by Sir A. C. Mackenzie. The accompanists were Mr. Ralph Letts and Miss Mary Burgess. Sir A. C. Mackenzie in the course of his address spoke of the continued prosperity and progress made by the Royal Academy during the past year. In the list of the school's departed patrons, Sir Alexander spoke gratefully of Mrs. Lewis Hill, Dr. Charles Oldham, who had left £1,000, for a violin scholarship, Mr. John Rutson, Sir Benjamin Baker, and lastly of Mr. Thomas Trelfall, late chairman of committee. Sir Alexander Mackenzie, in speaking of modern music, said "there was a mischievous drift which was gaining force in these latter days of hurry militating against the true interests of music and the future careers of its young professors." "There was now certainly much to be acquired in the matter both of skill and knowledge, the requirements of mere technique were increasingly large, composition was infinitely more complex, and the art of instrumentation had probably reached boiling point. Some hoped it had." The Principal also warned young musicians not to accept as a work of genius what was merely unintelligible, Towards the close of his address Sir Alexander quoted a warning from an article by Mr. Joseph Bennett against the pitfalls presented by modern music. After the speech, which was heartily cheered, the prize-winners, in a long procession, received their awards from the Duke of Connaught. In replying to the vote of thanks, His Royal Highness spoke of the real pleasure he had in again appearing among the students of the Royal Academy. "Like most Englishmen, he had a deep love of music." "Nothing," he said, "demands more time and patience than the noble art of music." In speaking of the progress the Academy is making, His Royal Highness said, "You have the great advantage of having at your head my old friend, Sir Alexander Mackenzie. No man works harder; I am afraid he works too hard." In the course of his speech, the Duke spoke of the necessity of keeping music pure and the need of the careful study of the great masters, and, with a reference to the gentlemen on the committee of management and a tribute to the generous friends of the Academy who have passed away, the speech concluded, the proceedings terminating with the singing of the National Anthem.

PRESENTATION TO MR. J. F. ELLISTON.

For years past the question of theatrical insurance has been discussed by certain sagacious theatrical managers. It has long been realised that the cost of insurance in the ordinary offices was too great when compared with the risk of fire to such property. Twenty years ago the attention of Mr. J. F. Elliston, of Bolton, was called to the excellent results attained by the Cotton Spinners' Mutual Insurance Company in that city; and the idea occurred to him that a similar scheme might be organised in connection with theatres. But there were many difficulties in the way, and though the idea was warmly supported by managers like Mr. R. D'Oyly Carte and Mr. Mercer Simpson, it was long before any practical step could be taken.

The Theatres Mutual Insurance Company, Limited, has an authorised share capital of £50,000, and a subscribed share capital of £18,870. The directors are Mr. George Alexander (chairman), Mr James Fyfe Elliston (vice-chairman), Mr. James Macready Chute, Mr. Frederick Mouillot, Mr. Arthur Collins, Mr. Herbert Beerbohm Tree, Mr. John Hart, and Mr. Frederick William Wyndham. The secretary is Mr. Ernest William Buckley, and the registered offices of the company are at 6, Bowlalley-lane, Hull. The third annual general meeting of the members was held at the St. James's Theatre, on Thursday, with Mr. George Alexander in the chair, to receive and consider the directors' report, the annual statement of accounts and balance-sheet, and the report of the auditors thereon; to declare a dividend; and to elect directors and auditors. In their report the directors again congratulated the shareholders upon the continued and increasing success of the company's operations. The continuance of the policy of judicious selection has been amply justified by the result of the year's working. The fire losses for the year have been remarkably low; so that during the three years' working the fire losses have averaged less than 4 per cent. of the nett premium income of the company. The total management expenses for the year, after crediting interest, &c., received, are 16 per cent. of the nett premium income. Material reductions have been made by the Tariff Offices in the rating of numerous theatres insured by this company; and the sum remaining to the credit of the revenue account is equivalent to about 88 per cent. of the premiums, and the directors recommended that this should be appropriated as follows: (a) By writing off the preliminary and formation expenses a sum equivalent to 10 per cent. of the nett premium income; (b) by the payment of a dividend at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, free of income-tax, on the paid-up capital of the company; (c) that a sum of approximately 30 per cent. of the annual premiums be carried forward as a reserve against the liability of policies current at the end of the financial year; and (d) that in accordance with the company's articles of association, the balance, representing over 63 per cent. of the nett premium income for the year, be apportioned amongst the policy-holders pro rata with the premiums paid. The limit on any one risk is now £4000, and those members who hold sixty shares, entitling them to an insurance of £3000 on any one property, may insure for an additional £1000 without applying for further shares. The directors have made arrangements to undertake the insurance of scenery and properties whilst on tour. They consider that this innovation and the continued prosperity of the company should facilitate a further increase of the company's business, and therefore remind the shareholders that they are individually and directly interested in the success of the company, and strongly urge them to assist the board by introducing such further business as they themselves can influence, and to bring the claims of the company to the notice of their friends. In accordance with the terms of the company's articles of association Mr. Arthur Collins and Mr. J. F. Elliston retired from the board of directors, but, being eligible, offered themselves for re-election. The auditors of the company, Messrs. P. and J. Kevan, chartered accountants, Bolton, also retired and offered themselves for re-election.

Amongst those present on the stage of the St. James's Theatre on Thursday were Mr. George Alexander (who presided), Mr. J. F. Elliston, Mr. Herbert Blackmore, Mr. F. J. Domville, Mr. Fred Fredericks, Mr. Ernest Stevens, Mr. Cecil Paget, Mr. Wm. Bailey, Mr. T. H. Birch, Mr. F. Mouillot, Mr. John Hart, Mr J. M. Chute, Mr. J. F. Graham, Mr. P. Hedderwick (solicitor), Mr. E. W. Buckley (secretary), Mr. H. G. Dudley Bennett, Mr. Ernest Carpenter, Mr. Will Smithson, and Mr. Milton Bode.

MR. GEORGE ALEXANDER, in opening the meeting, referred to the following paragraph which appeared in the Daily Mail of Thursday:—

"We understand that a scheme is being mooted for the formation of a theatre insurance corporation with a nominal capital of, say, a million sterling. A small mutual insurance company organised by theatrical proprietors already exists, but it is unable to cope with big risks and is admittedly unequal to dealing with the business on an adequate scale. We are able to state that six or seven of the leading men in the theatrical world have the matter in hand, and that they have already approached the fire offices with a view to obtaining such a reduction in premiums as would obviate the formation of a new corporation."

He desired most strenuously to deny that the Theatres Mutual Insurance Company was unable to cope with big risks, and was admittedly unequal to dealing with the business on an adequate scale. With the means of information at their disposal, and other advantages, they were second to none in the ability to take any risk in connection with theatrical property. Though they had only been in existence for a short time, their position was already assured, and no company, old or new, could compete with them on their special ground. He hoped that all theatrical managers would see the advantage of joining the company, and that the present shareholders would do all in their power to assist the board by introducing such further business as they could influence. Their vice-chairman, Mr. J. F. Elliston, had given information, and done such work, as no paid official in any office could do or give. Mr. Alexander then moved the adoption of the report, and called on Mr. Elliston to second the motion.

MR. J. F. ELLISTON, in an interesting speech which included some startling statistics, said that, twenty years ago, his attention had been called to the Bolton Cotton Spinners' Mutual Insurance Company, and to the great reduction in terms which had been effected by it. Believing that the same system could be applied to theatrical insurance, he consulted the Managers' Association, and sent out circulars to various theatrical managers. The response was not encouraging, and Mr. Elliston felt the want of figures to drive home his arguments. His opportunity came when he was made chairman of the Bolton Board of Guardians. He then obtained the assessments of 277 theatres in the United Kingdom, and found that people were paying a great deal too much. Even at that period about £5,000,000 worth of property was under assessment; and since then the amount must have much increased. As for the music halls, they had grown from 168 to 468. If they could only include the theatres and music halls in one insurance scheme, what an amount they would save! Twenty years ago the insurance companies were drawing £50,000 per annum in insurance premiums. Had they only taken one-quarter of that they would still have made a handsome profit. Mr. Elliston then gave some astonishing figures of the amount saved by the Bolton company, and concluded by an earnest appeal to the shareholders to use every effort to extend the influence of the Theatres Mutual Insurance Company.

MR. T. H. BIRCH suggested that they should show their sense of the directors' work by voting them a sum of money for their services last year.

MR. JOHN HART, on behalf of the directors, asked that the remuneration might be deferred to another year, and Mr. Birch accordingly withdrew his proposition.

MR. HART then moved that the sum remaining to the credit of the revenue account should be appropriated as proposed in the report, and this was agreed to.

On the motion of Mr. Ernest Stevens, seconded by Mr. Milton Bode, Mr. Arthur Collins and Mr. J. F. Elliston were re-elected directors, and the auditors of the company were also re-elected.

MR. ALEXANDER, having read a paragraph which it was proposed to send to the Daily Mail, correcting the errors in its paragraph of Thursday, said that the greatest joy in life was the consciousness of having done some good work for his fellow-men. The next best joy was to acknowledge so great a virtue. They had seen the report, and had heard Mr. Elliston's speech; and they were able to say if he had done his duty or not. Mr. Elliston was both a good talker and a good worker, and the combination of persuasive eloquence and hard work, in his case, had brought about the most happy results. They owed to Mr. J. M. Chute the idea of acknowledging Mr. Elliston's services by a presentation. At first they had thought of giving him a very valuable cup; but, after the recent experience of Ascot, they felt that to do so might cause Mr. Elliston difficulty and danger, and might mean risk to the company in which he should insure against burglary. So they had decided to place in the cup, instead of champagne, a cheque, which would be a suitable vehicle for the expression of their very good wishes. Mr. Elliston would value the cup as a proof of the appreciation of the work he had done; and it would be something for him to gaze upon during the remainder of his long life, and to hand down with pride to those who followed him.

MR. ELLISTON, who was obviously affected, said he never had dreamed that his services would be so highly appreciated. The cup would remind him of friendships and associations that would never be forgotten.

The gift, which Mr. Alexander handed to Mr. Elliston, was a two-handled silver cup of massive Georgian pattern, supplied by D. and J. Wellby, Ltd., of Garrick-street, the cover beautifully decorated with a raised band of vine-leaves and flutings on the lower part. Its height was 13¼in., and its weight 84oz. The inscription was as follows: "Presented to James Fyfe Elliston, in appreciation of his untiring efforts in promoting the success of the Theatres Mutual Insurance Company, July 25, 1907." On the sides and cover, engraved in facsimile, were the following signatures:—Geo. Alexander, W. E. Allen, Henry C. Arnold, Robt. Arthur, E. W. Buckley, H. Cecil Beryl, T. H. Birch, Milton Bode, Arthur Bourchier, Granville Barker, H. G. Dudley Bennett, Wm. Bailey, J. W. Boughton, Herbert Blackmore, R. C. Buchanan, A. F. Cross, L. Collingwood, Mrs. D'Oyly Carte, Sidney Cooper, Edward Compton, Arthur Collins, Otto Culling, J. M. Chute, J. M. Clement, Frank Curzon, Ernest Carpenter, Peter Davey, E. J. Domville, Tom B. Davis, Ernest Dottridge, Geo. Edwardes, Harris Fineberg, E. Graham Falcon, Chas. Fox, jun., Fred Fredericks, H. A. Freeman, J. F. Graham, Mrs. Michael Gunn, William Greet, John Gatti, Rocco Gatti, P. Hedderwick, Frederick Harrison, John Hart, J. Bannister Howard, Jno. R. Huddlestone, John Horgan, Arthur Jefferson, James Kiernan, W. W. Kelly, Wm. Kevan, A. McLeod Loader, Egbert Lewis, J. B. Wyndham, Sir Charles Wyndham, J. Edward Whitty, Fred W. Warden, C. F. Williams, Alexander B. Wright, John J. Wright, Rich. Waldon, and Lewis Waller.

A scene of general enthusiasm followed the presentation, all the managers present shaking hands with Mr. Elliston and congratulating him heartily; and Mr. Alexander moved an informal vote of thanks to Mr. Chute for suggesting the idea of the testimonial.

Hana, the theatrical photographer, of Bedford-street, has taken an excellent photograph of the cup. No doubt the signatories will be glad to have copies.

THE MOODY-MANNERS COMPANY.

On Tuesday, July 23, the Opera, in Four Acts, by Mozart, entitled

"THE MARRIAGE OF FIGARO."

Figaro .....MR. LEWYS JAMES
Dr. Bartelo .....MR. CHARLES MAGRATH
The Count Almaviva .....MR. WILLIAM DEVER
Don Basilio .....MR. H. BAILEY
Antonio .....MR. E. G. RENSHAW
Cherubino .....MLLE. ZÉLIE DE LUSSAN
Marcellina .....MISS M. BAKER
Barbarina .....MISS HARROW
The Countess Almaviva ....MISS KATE ANDERSON
Susanna .....MME. FANNY MOODY

It seems more than passing strange that Mozart, even after the production of The Marriage of Figaro on May 1, 1786, should be "still obliged to give lessons to earn a trifle," as he himself expressed it. At Prague, soon afterwards, the opera was given, and honour was done to the composer by an aristocratic musical amateur, who placed his house at Mozart's disposal. The inhabitants of Prague had gone mad over the opera, and at a concert the brilliant young composer kept an enthusiastic audience in ecstasies of admiration by improvising, finishing with variations on Figaro's famous air, "Non più andrai." How delightful it is to listen to the rich fount of melody which Mozart poured out in the first of his masterpieces, and the Moody-Manners enterprise is to be heartily thanked for giving music-lovers an opportunity of again worshipping at the shrine of the Salzburg master. The opera was first produced in England on June 18, 1812, at the King's Theatre, Haymarket, in aid of the funds of the Scottish Hospital, among the performers being Catalani, Mrs. Dickons, Signor Naldi, and Fischer. A famous revival was that at Covent Garden in 1852, when Mme. Grisi played Susanna, Mlle. Alboni was the Cherubino, Signor Tamburini the Count Almaviva, and Signor Marini the Figaro. Mme. Vestris also put on the opera at Covent Garden in the early forties and appeared as Cherubino, Miss A. Kemble being the Susanna and Miss Rainsforth, the original Arline in The Bohemian Girl, the Countess. Thomas Holcroft had familiarised English audiences with the story of the opera, for he adapted Beaumarchais' Mariage de Figaro under the title of The Follies of a Day, performed at Covent Garden on Dec. 17, 1784.

The representation on Tuesday of the famous opera at the Lyric had all the care and attention to detail which are such noticeable features of the Moody-Manners enterprise, and a cast of considerable strength, accompanied by an orchestra that played con amore, gave complete satisfaction. Miss Fanny Moody was in excellent voice, and realised the beauty of the music by the charm of her singing. In the concerted pieces she was specially brilliant, and a triumph was secured in the air known in Italian as "Deh vieni non tardar," which might have been repeated, so exquisitely was it rendered; but the bis was wisely declined. It was not only in her singing, but in her acting, that Mme. Moody captivated the house, and her coquetry and sauciness were irresistible. Miss Rosina Beynon was originally down for the part of Cherubino, but was unable to appear, and at the last moment Miss Zélie de Lussan literally, as well as figuratively, stepped into the "breach." A fascinating impudence characterised Miss de Lussan's rendering, and she was encored in "Voi che sapete," to which her finished vocalisation did complete justice. Mr. Lewys James made a lively and amusing Figaro, and gave "Non più andrai" with admirable point and emphasis. Miss Kate Anderson, as the Countess, sang "Dove sono" with much expression; Mr. Charles Magrath as Dr. Bartolo added to the humour of the representation; and Mr. William Dever displayed his well-known ability in the part of Count Almaviva. Mr. H. Bailey made an amusing Don Basilio, Mr. E. G. Renshaw a sufficiently droll Antonio, Miss M. Baker sounded the humorous possibilities of Marcellina, and Miss Harrow was a promising Barbarina. Signor Romualdo Sapio conducted with zeal and discernment.

A NUMEROUS audience assembled at the Tyne Theatre, Newcastle, on Wednesday, on the occasion of a complimentary performance and presentation to Mr. Fred C. Sutcliffe, who for fifteen years has ably fulfilled the arduous duties of manager of the house. A long programme, including many prominent variety artists, was submitted. At an interval the Lord Mayor of Newcastle (Councillor J. M. Oubridge), presented to Mr. Sutcliffe a beautiful silver épergne and a cheque for a handsome amount. The Lord Mayor referred to Mr. Sutcliffe's continued endeavours to provide the highest class of theatrical entertainment. Mr. Sutcliffe expressed the pride he felt at all who had patronised the testimonial, and thanked them individually and collectively. He concluded by hoping that the friendship that had hitherto existed between the public of Newcastle and himself would continue for many years.

HANDEL'S score of "The Messiah" was sold at Sotheby's on the 19th inst. for £100. The version is that belonging to the late Otto Goldschmidt, the husband of Jenny Lind, and is the third known in the handwriting of J. Christopher Smith, the composer's amanuensis. C. von Weber's autograph score of the overture to Oberon, on six pages, together with two drawings, one of Weber's head, realised £59; three small fragments of Mozart's writings, including part of a fugue in E flat, went for £31; Beethoven's sketch of the coda of the scherzo of the Ninth Symphony for £26, and a set of eight letters written by Wagner to Heinrich Moritz in 1851-3 brough £46.

LONDON VARIETY THEATRES.

HOLBORN EMPIRE.

There is a sound programme this week at the Holborn Empire, the different items being of a sufficiently varied and interesting character to fit in with almost every individual predilection that could be said to exist in regard to music hall entertainments. Mr. Billy Williams, in his blue velvet suit, his face wreathed in a series of smiles that really won't come off, entertains the house hugely with his song, which tells all about the "Only bit of English" that he has. He explains that all his household goods have been made in foreign countries, mainly in Germany. Even his corn comes from Russia and his batter from Denmark. And the only bit of English that he has left is his baby boy. The jocular, good-humoured manner which Mr. Williams sustains during the rendering of this song finds a similar fancy in the minds of the audience, who hugely enjoy the turn. Mr. Arthur Croxon provides plenty of amusement in his imitations of children at an evening party. In fact, this week's list of attractions at the Holborn Empire might almost be called a children's bill, for we have Denton and Rowland's clever company of juveniles, including Miss Marjorie Lawrence, in The Punch and Judy Girl, and Harvey's American School Children in song and dance. All these youngsters seem to be extremely well trained. Harvey's children have some very pretty vocal numbers, notably "School days," "Bessie and her little brown bear," "Fatherland," and "Sailing," each of which is sung and chorused in excellent style. Gardiner and Wright contrive to be most comical in their "spectacular fantasy" Winning a Queen. The absurdities of the act cannot fail to excite merriment. Miss Isabelle Dillon makes herself popular with her "Pansy" verses, the chorus of which is sung by a child in the wings; and Mr. Billy French contributes a particularly smart dance. Miss Mollie Seymour seems to be quite a versatile young lady, for she sings extremely well the ditty, "May from Maida Vale," and treats us to skilful interpretations on the violin of Irish compositions. The Yin Lian Family appear in their really marvellous Risley act, their jumping and acrobatic feats being altogether astonishing. Mr. Arthur Woodville, the swell comedian, has a capital number in "I wish I were you," and the Kirbys cause laughter with their comedy act. Miss Olive Lenton, the Australian comedienne, who is seen in a most dazzling costume, comes in for a goodly share of favour for a very enchanting rendering of "Sylvia" and her delightful dancing. Les Martineks furnish some smart speciality business in their act in which one of the partners assumes the rôle of a doll and enacts it in realistic fashion. The Imperial Bioscope brings down the curtain with a vivid and attractive series of pictures illustrative of the Victoria Falls in Rhodesia. Mr. Claude Marner, the manager here, and Mr. William A. Salmond, the acting-manager, are in evidence in the front of the house, and the orchestra is ably conducted by Mr. James Sale.

THE EUSTON.

A generous measure of variety is always to be discovered in the schemes of amusement associated with this popular house, in the neighbourhood of the great London termini in the Euston-road, and, in spite of the fact that we are now getting the summer weather that has been so long delayed, Manager Fred McAvoy is blessed with two large audiences every evening. It is supposed that the craze for the undraped is fast dying down; but the attitude of the Eustonians towards the Countess Romanow, who produces a series of poses under the title of "Iris," created some doubt in the mind of the writer as to the truth of this contention, for the beautiful Russian fugitive is much applauded in her realisations of "Vanity," "The Bathing Girl," "Venus de Milo," and "Rock of Ages." During the intervals between the pictures, the Bioscope portrays an episode in the life of the Countess, showing the circumstances which caused her to go on the stage—a matter that does not interest the audience in the least, but the lady's poses are in high favour. Early in the evening, Mr. and Mrs. Mark Melford set the audience laughing with the highly amusing episode, Non-Suited. The barrister is a modern Buzfuz, and the way he curls up a pale young curate, who is seeking damages for breach of promise, rejoices the hearts of gods, pit, and stalls. Mr. Melford is extremely funny, and he is quite adequately supported. A delightful vocalist is Miss Margaret Ashton, whose fascinations in a principal boy's dress are irresistible. She sings with culture and charm "The lily and the rose," and then breathes inspiring sentiment, international friendship, and brotherhood in the song "When Tommy Atkins marries Dolly Gray," a most enjoyable number, with a refrain that champions "Hands across the seas," and stirs the patriotic pulse at the same time. It should go far in its career of popularity.

Lady Julia, the ape with a human brain, has been found amenable to training, and eats, drinks, and smokes at the invitation of its owner. The animal also shows its intelligence in posing in costume, and finally, putting on a nightgown, jumps into bed. The show excites much curiosity and interest. Harry Carsdale, probably the oldest mimic of animals on the stage, repeats his success here as a farmyard mimic, and his imitations lose nothing by his dialect. Other variety turns are contributed by Robins and Collier, in the comedy scena, The Lady and the Porter, and by Master Harry Clark, pocket comedian.

A dramatic and realistic one-act play is the description of The Great Poison Case, which recounts an incident in the life of Barbara Merrick, a nurse, who is tried at the Assizes for the murder of a patient by arsenic. The chief witness against her is Dr. Richard Floyd, who is the real culprit. The scene is the court of justice, and the spectacle of the cowering wretch in the witness-box under cross-examination is made extremely agonising and painful by the powerful acting of Mr. C. W. Somerset, who is playing, at the Euston, his original part of Dr. Floyd, in which he scored such a hit on the production of Her Advocate (from which The Great Poison Case is taken) at the Duke of York's. Mr. Somerset takes infinite pains, and his picture of remorse is wonderfully convincing and awe-inspiring. He receives excellent support from Messrs. Haynes-Seymour, M. A. Wetherell, Cameron Carr, and Misses Katherine Romsey and Agnes Russell. The programme is completed by Ruffell's Bioscope.

THE SURREY.

The cosy interior of the Surrey is twice nightly packed with an audience that any manager might be proud of, and the thorough understanding that exists between Mr. Charles Craig, the acting-manager, and the Surreyites is eloquent of the efficiency of that gentleman. Topping the current bill is Fred Karno's company of comedians in his screamingly funny absurdity, The Smoking Concert. The sketch provokes such hearty laughter that one has neither the time nor the inclination to dwell upon the absurdity of the situations. In direct contrast is the tragic incident presented by Mr. Leonard Mortimer's combination, entitled A Man with a Fortune. Set in three scenes, it is a powerful dramatic story of crime, which is untangled by the untiring efforts of Luxmore, the detective, a character admirably depicted by Mr. Harry McClelland. Miss Helena Walbran as the persecuted wife, Hetty Dawson, imbues her part with deep womanly feeling. As her husband, Tom Dawson, Mr. Herbert Pearson is manly, earnest, and convincing; Mr. Albert Guyon as the villain, Jenson Wayne, is decidedly good. The comedy part is safe in the hands of Mr. Charles Ludlow as the chauffeur, Dicky Dunlop; while Miss Guinevere Shelton as the old toll-house keeper gives a clever performance.

Among the variety turns unqualified praise is due to the Merrions, who appear as the eccentric tailors and also as music-sellers, who are able to illustrate in character any song in their stock. They are a merry band indeed, and well merit the appreciation their efforts evoke.

Mr. Frank Seeley is a droll comedian, and his burlesque character of Cinderella keeps his audience well amused; while his second effort, "I'll never forget the day," is full of unctuous humour. Learto and his highly-trained and intelligent canine companion, Babs, give a novel and amusing entertainment. One hardly knows which deserves more praise: the master, for the music which he produces from babies and pigs, or his sagacious little terrier, who assists him in playing a solo on the bells and dances an Italian fandango. Stuart and Evans, as humorous patterers, dancers, and singers, bid fair to make the renown they ask for in their opening duet. Will Thompson is the fortunate possessor of a good voice, and gives a spirited rendering of his ballad "Return." The Almas submit a daring hand and head balancing turn, the final feat of one performer, who stands on his head on the top rail of a pyramid of chairs reaching almost to the top of the proscenium, holding the audience in breathless excitement. Hardie Palm has a good medley song in "Good-bye." Florence Schubert's shapely figure is set off to the best advantage in a charming fancy costume of white, while her rendering of "Young man, you'll do," and her medley of Scotch songs, finds much favour. Jessie Gourlay sings admirably to harp accompaniment "Good-bye for ever" and "The Carnival," and is rapturously applauded. An agreeable ending to a most enjoyable evening is Raymond's splendid film depicting the life-drama of "The Twin Sisters."

ISLINGTON EMPIRE.

In spite of the numerous counter attractions close at hand, this place of amusement still continues to hold its own, and is exceedingly well patronised each night at both performances. An interesting programme is being placed before the patrons this week. Frank and Free, a couple of comedy artists, provide plenty of fun of an acceptable type, and their advice to married couples keeps the audience in a very happy state of mind. Much praise is due to Miss Bertha Winder for her contribution. She is correctly termed the original dancing marvel, for in spite of her still tender years her ability in her particular line of business is very marked.

A humorous playlet, entitled Cockey, is provided by Mr. Picton Roxborough and Miss Fanny Wright. The piece deals with the misunderstandings which arise from the existence of a cat and parrot, which, bearing respectively the names of a female and a male, are thrust into the family circle. This amusing episode is well received. The comedy element is very evident in the turn provided by Dale and O'Malley, whose jokes are original and whose method is exceedingly quaint. Laughter of a side-splitting nature is created by this amusing couple, and they thoroughly deserve the appreciation shown to them. Hallam and Stanton appear in a musical comedy sketch of much interest. Their vocal efforts are of a high order of excellence, and the lady contributes a truly harmonious rendering of the song "In Dreamland." Mr. Frank Harwood sings a couple of songs in good style. His first, "Rowing to Hampton Court" is tunefully delivered, and the second, of a more serious nature, is sung with skill. Mr. Harry Leybourne, the popular mimic, is specially successful in his efforts to amuse. He cleverly takes off various people who have appeared at a certain concert, and both in style and voice he is interesting. He quickly changes his costume in full view of the audience to that of a lady ballad vocalist, and is deserving of much praise for his performance.

D'Arc's Marionettes provide plenty of amusement to young and old alike. Different music hall artistes are impersonated by these dolls with faithful accuracy in every direction. A lady and gentleman are responsible for the voices of the artists, whose style and mannerisms are wonderfully reproduced. No effort has been spared to make this turn what it is—a complete success. The entertainment concludes with a series of interesting pictures shown by the Imperial Bioscope. Mr. George L. Wilson, the courteous and energetic manager here, makes the comfort of the audience his first consideration.

EMPIRE, CAMBERWELL.

Mr. Jesse Sparrow and Mr. Harry Bawn persent a weekly bill of such excellence and variety that this cosy little Empire on Denmark Hill is packed twice nightly. The pièce de résistance of the current bill is the absorbing and exciting sketch played by Mr. Allan Holt's carefully-selected company, entitled A Society Woman, in which the essentials of a five-act drama are contained. Each of the characters well earned the appreciation bestowed. Most of the hard work falls to Miss Grace Lester, who as Lady Phyllis imbues her part with a womanly tenderness and charm that is beyond all praise, while her fight with the villain must be a great strain on her physical resources. As Lord Angus, Mr. Jack Denton does not spare himself in the final scene, and comes through a trying ordeal with flying colours; Mr. W. Bentley as Ralph is manly and earnest; while Mr. Webster Parte as the Constable, Miss May Seymour as Jane, and Miss Ella Gillette as the child Gerald fill their respective parts with care.

Another capital entertainment is that provided by Miss Kitty Glover and company in a farcical comedy sketch, entitled Mr. There's Heir. A "slavey" called Slops has invested in two German lottery tickets, one in her own name and the other in that of the young artist-lodger, Charles Dare, and much fun and confusion arises when the winning list is published stating that Charles Dare is the winner of £500 with his ticket No. 1,033. When the agent arrives with the welcome news, Dare thinks he must have purchased the ticket and forgotten it. The amount comes most opportunely, for it will enable him to fight the probate of his father's will, which his brother opposes, and give him a fortune of £50,000. Slops, realising that Dare thinks the money his, determines to let him have it; but Dare falls across Slops' private box, and discovers the lottery tickets therein, one in his name and the other in that of the faithful Slops. He is struck with remorse at his unkind treatment, and apologises; but all is set right when news comes that Dare's brother, on hearing that he meant to fight for his rights, has left Dare to the possession of the £50,000. As Slops, Miss Glover gives a sketch for which there can be nothing but praise, while her two male companions tender her such loyal assistance that renders success assured.

Billie Burford, with her Gibson-like figure, excellent voice, and catchy, tuneful songs, "The honeymoon under the sea" and "A little help is worth a peck of pity," gains vociferous applause; Miss Cissie Dryden in her song "Wouldn't you like me to love you?" is decidedly chic and fascinating; Rowland Hill is quaint and grotesque in his patter song and female impersonation as "The Catch of the Season"; Little Victoria, in her songs and dancing, gives great promise of a bright future; Miss Thérèse Herve, as a special extra turn, charmed her audience with her admirably rendered song "It's you, you, you"; and others who add to the enjoyment of the evening are Chas. Wilson, a marvellous jumper; the Bombay Troupe of dancers; the Royal Delomes, energetic and clever clog-dancers; the Matulla Troupe of skilful jugglers, in a very pretty scena; and Jeapes' Empire pictures.

Mr. Syd Herman, the popular Hebrew comedian, will shortly produce a new scena, entitled The Israelite.

PARIS VARIETY GOSSIP.

The case of the Isola Bros. and Paul Ruez has taken a strange turn. The Isolas having become the Directors of the Opera Populaire, or opera at popular prices, at the Gaîté, which is a Government theatre, are debarred from running any other theatres. The bankruptcy of Ruez has, therefore, been annulled; so, to all outside appearances, everything will go on as before. We use the phrase "to all outside appearances" advisedly, as it is difficult to believe that the Isolas would let three halls like the Folies-Bergere, Olympia, and Parisiana go from their keeping without at least some compensation.

The Moulin Rouge, under its new management, opened on Thursday with the Revue de la Femme. In the cast are to be seen Miles Allems, Mealy, Miss Lawler, MM. Morton, Sinoël, Carlos Avril, and Berthez.

A new number in the bill of the Alcazar d'Ete is Miss Ethel Whiteside and her Piccaninnies. Vasco, the mad musician, seems to be creating quite a sensation here.

The Châtelet will commence its coming season with a new fairy play called La Boite à Malices, and later in the season M. Fontaine will mount a revue called La Revue du Châtlet.

There is now talk of turning the Casino de Paris into a high-class concert house on the lines of the Queen's Hall, Langham-place, Regent-street.

The principal cinematograph operators of France have decided to form a syndicate for the protection of their professional interests. At present their headquarters are at 1, Boulevard des Italiens.

Mr. W. Gerson, late of the Cirque Becketow, has taken over the old International Variety Agency which was founded by C. M. Ercole nearly twenty years ago, and which has for the last year or so been carried on by M. Louis Martin. The business will still be carried on at the same premises, 22, Chaussée d'Antin.

STRATFORD EMPIRE.

Miss Alice Lloyd, fresh from her American triumphs, is well remembered as the Stratford pantomime Cinderella of a year back, and she is most cordially welcomed. Dainty, bright, and vivacious as ever, and, if possible, in better voice, her success is instantaneous with her first song, "May," which suits her admirably. She is also heard in "The Tourist and the Maid," which piquantly tells of an arch maiden who is quite capable of looking after herself. In what might be termed a rather "daring" but distinctly chic bathing costume the singer next appears in a very "taking" ditty, "You splash me and I'll splash you," which fairly brings down the house. The McNaughtons are also firm favourites at Stratford, and they make their entrance to rounds of applause. Two cross-talk comedians who play into each other's hands better than Fred and Tom McNaughton do are not on the vaudeville stage, their well-contrasted styles and genuine means of extracting mirth being sufficient to raise a smile from a stoic. Miss Victoria Monks quickly wins her way into popularity when she sings "London Town," and she is equally successful in "Leaving Him," sung in particularly her own style, and the vociferous applause which results renders a third number imperative. This time "Moving Day" is given, and the blend of humour and pathos is most acceptable. E. Rousby's "Around Paris" is a novel and artistic exhibition of the wonders of electricity. J. W. Rowley scores heavily with "Paddle your own canoe," as well as in a "dame" song, "No business of mine," afterwards delighting the audience with an old-time favourite, "A Fairy Night." Charles Whalen and Carrie West are an extremely smart comedy duo, who provide some merry moments during their occupancy of the stage, Mr. Whalen's dexterous dancing being particularly good. Park's Eton Boys well maintain their reputation as vocalists, and the Legay Quartette of Parisian Dancers supply a skilful exhibition of the terpsichorean art. Miss Ella Dean creates a favourable impression with a vocal contribution which her fine contralto voice does full justice to. On the night of our visit an "extra turn" in Parker and Parr, duettists, was in the bill. Their voices are falsetto and light baritone respectively and both sing admirably, but their first contribution would have been better if given in character instead of evening dress. Their next item is an amorous declamation to a fair charmer, and in this they are assisted by a lady confederate in one of the boxes. The Bioscope Pictures are always in favour here, and this week's series, including views of the Great Victoria Falls, are watched with keen interest. The current programme opens with the overture from Zampa, expressively played by the orchestra under the skilful guidance of Mr. Augustus Greco.

HORACE WHEATLEY IN LIVERPOOL.
THOUSANDS OF ADMIRERS.
LYRIC.

The chief attraction in this week's Lyric programme is the fact that it affords the theatre-goer an opportunity of renewing his acquaintance with that prime old favourite, Mr. Horace Wheatley. In recent years there has grown up a disposition to quarrel with what is known as the "stage Irishman," on the ground that he is not only unt ue to life, but gives, as a rule, a degraded idea of the national character. Mr. Wheatley's personation of Hibernian character may be no more faithful to the original than the average stage coon is to the original denizen of the plantation. That is a point which may be left to others, but at any rate the Wheatley Irishman is a real good fellow and honestly amusing to have thousands of admirers whom, to judge by last evening's reception, he still retains.—The Liverpool Daily Post and Mercury, July 23, 1907.

Mr. Fred Eustace will play his ever-popular sketch, Our Curate—now in its fifth year of success—on Aug. 5, at the Hippodrome, Poplar (late the Prince's Theatre).

At the Ilford carnival in aid of the Hospital Fund, Mr. H. A. Langlois performed the remarkable feat of walking five miles made up as the Giant.

Mr. Harry Burns, the world-renowned popular variety agent, has once again returned home safe and sound from his Continental tour. He was accompanied by his charming wife, Miss Helen Charles, the celebrated society entertainer.

The 521st meeting of the Executive Committee of the M.H.A.R.A. was held at the offices of the Association on Wednesday afternoon, Mr. Charles Coborn in the chair. Messrs. Fred W. Millis, Lieut. Albini, John Alexander, C. C. Bartram, Bob Hutt, and G. H. Smythson were among those present. Mr. Tyson, of the Hotel Majestic, Barrow-in-Furness, was appointed agent of the Association. The secretary reported the result of his visit to Cardiff, and was thanked by the Committee. Thirty-three new members were made, the total receipts amounting to £37.

"HER CONVICT LOVER."

Lady Hilda Franklin ....Miss Eugenie Magnus
Frank Atherton .....Mr. Fred Terris
Dennis O'Neil .....Mr. Dan F. Roe
Luke Desborough .....Mr. Charles Boult
Silas Leach .....Mr. Arthur Gilroy
Police-Inspector Yates .....Mr. Murray
P.C. Smith .....Mr. G. Saunders

Melodrama and moving pictures are effectively combined in the new sketch from the prolific pen of Mr. Arthur Jefferson, which was introduced to London on Monday. Many thrills are provided by the plot, which tells of the hero falsely accused and the heroine persecuted by villainy, while a series of cinematograph films furnishes an exciting finish to the dramatic story. The evil genius of the piece is the despicable Luke Desborough, who covets the fortune of Lady Hilda Franklin, whose father he had murdered some years previous. Desborough had a formidable rival in Frank Atherton; but he has disposed of him by fixing upon him the responsibility of the old man's death and getting him convicted of manslaughter. Frank, however, escapes from gaol, and arrives at Lady Hilda's house in time to prevent Desborough from administering a drug to the young girl in order to get her to sign her fortune away. Desborough summons the police to recapture Frank, but a Jewish moneylender, an accomplice of Desborough, who has got possession of a confession of the murder from the real culprit, offers to befriend Frank, and advises him to take refuge in the bank close by. His object is to tighten the fetters which already bind Frank to prison, but the scheme is discovered by an Irish serving man named Dennis O'Neil, who hides in a large chest in the bank vaults. The Israelite enters, and induces Frank to walk into the strong room, but Dennis springs out and quickly huddles the scoundrel into the box, after possessing himself of his coat. He gives the prearranged signal, and when the police enter they are sent blundering into the cellar beneath, while Frank makes good his escape. The further adventures of the hero are vividly depicted on the biograph, by means of which Frank is seen travelling by train to London, accompanied by the devoted Dennis, who in the course of the journey discovers in the pocket of the purloined overcoat the confession of Desborough's guilt. The journey to the police station and the subsequent arrest of the real criminal are shown, and the series is concluded with the felicitous picture of the wedding of Frank and Hilda. The sketch, which created unbounded interest and was enthusiastically received, had adeqnate representation. Mr. Fred Terris bore himself bravely as the escaped convict, and acted with force and energy; and Miss Eugenie Magnus played with emotional power as Lady Hilda. Mr. Dan F. Roe established himself as a favourite in the part of the jovial Irishman, Dennis O'Neil; Mr. Charles Boult cleverly portrayed the evil propensities of Luke Desborough; and Mr. Arthur Gilroy gave a sound sketch of Silas Leach.

Prominent among the varieties which Mr. P. A. Lennon presents to excellent houses is Mr. Phil Ray, who keeps the audience in a state of hilarity by his broadly comic effusions. Fred Curran develops a quaint style as a comedian; and to Abel and Welsh, Continental grotesques, much merriment is due. The Ten Dixie Girls, a leading spirit of whom is Miss May Carter, supply an exhilarating scena, in which the singing and dancing of the "Silver Coons" are interrupted by the arrival of a lady from the moon, who takes part in the revels. The interlude is a very pleasing one, and gains great favour. A clever ventriloquial show is given by Mr. Bert Williams; little Ina Lorrimer does some neat dancing in Scottish costume; interesting pictures of the International Horse Show are given on Vernon's Bioscope; and the programme is completed by Miss Sadie Simpson, the bright comedienne and clever dancer; Newham and Latimer, and Miss Jenny Johns, the "Seaside Girl."

"MUTINY."

Lieut. Manley .....Mr. John Davidson
Nebu Singh .....Mr. Villiers Stanley
Terry O'Brien .....Mr. Cecil Morand
Asfinger .....Mr. Arrach Saumy
Kitty .....Miss Marion Mayne
Ghuznah .....Miss Melrose Millett

Mr. Frank E. Burdett is to be congratulated upon his military sketch, Mutiny, in which the plot is deftly arranged and well worked up to an exciting termination. Nebu Singh, a leading rebel in the Indian Mutiny, is determined to destroy the English camp, principally because Ghuznah, a native maiden who is in love with Lieut. Manley, refuses his advances. After Nebu Singh has made several futile attempts to injure both the girl and the lieutenant, he finally arranges all preparations for the destruction of the camp, and with that view has a large gun directed towards the ruined Mosque where the women and children are situated, intending in the meantime, at a certain signal, to have Lieut. Manley disposed of. The foul plot being discovered, the treacherous Nebu Singh is after some exciting incidents ultimately shot at the cannon's mouth. Mr. Frank E. Burdett has brought together an excellent company, who have been well-rehearsed, while the admirable scenery and the costly Oriental effects contributed largely to the general effect. Mr. Villiers Stanley worked hard as Nebu Singh, and presented a characteristic interpretation, while Mr. John Davidson soon became a favourite as the cool and intrepid Lieut. Manley. Mr. Cecil Morand as Terry O'Brien was natural as the good-hearted Irishman, being ably supported by Miss Marion Mayne as the zealous Kitty. Miss Melrose Millett was duly impressive as Ghuznah, and gave an interesting performance.

MARIE LLOYD
A PACKED HOUSE.

A packed house at the Ipswich Hippodrome welcomed "the one and only" Marie Lloyd on Monday night, and demonstrated its delight with her wonderfully chic performance in no uncertain manner. As all the world knows, Marie Lloyd is somewhat daring in her topics; but whether she is singing or talking—confidentially—to the audience, her cleverness and smartness as an artist is indisputable. The great clearness with which she speaks makes it a pleasure to listen. No one says, "What was that?" when Marie Lloyd sings a song; like Dan Leno—and the Hottentot that she so roguishly imitates—she "gets there" every time. Her realisation of every kind of person that she names in the course of her varied répertoire is one of her great achievements. It is not always that the programme of any house of entertainment speaks the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; but in describing Marie Lloyd as "Queen of comediennes," there is no exaggeration.—Evening Star, Ipswich, July 23, 1907.

Mr. A. Phanto (the Phantos) has just sold his well-known winning bulldog, Roundhill Doctor. The animal has won at every show at which he was exhibited, and is a well-known dog. He sailed on the Empress of Britain to Montreal, Canada, on Friday, the 19th. This makes the sixteenth bulldog Mr. Phanto has shipped abroad.

THE ELLIOTTS AND SAVONAS
MUSICAL MARVELS.
THE EMPIRE.

The Elliott Savonas, described as musical marvels, a title which their act somewhat justifies, top the bill at this house in a creation entitled "The Palace of Orpheus." The god of music could scarce have envied a richer abode than that put on the halls to-day at a cost of some £2,000. For novelty and daring beauty it is a piece of delightful work.—Newcastle Daily Chronicle.

The staff of the Leicester Pavilion Theatre had their annual outing on Sunday, when a large company proceeded by brake, motor, and cycle to historical Market Bosworth, fourteen miles from Leicester, the scene of the famous battle and death of Richard the Third. Here are also situated the well-known mansion and park of the Dixie family. After an exhilarating journey, a most sumptuous dinner was served at the Dixie Arms Hotel. Mr. Joe Lawrence, who occupied the chair, proposed the health of Mr. Macnaghten, who, he said, would be pleased to hear of the good time they were having. The toast was received with musical honours, as was also that of Mr. Fred Baugh. The members of the party then indulged in rambles to various places of interest. An excellent tea was served at five o'clock, and, after a terrific storm, Leicester was safely reached at nine o'clock. The company numbered upwards of sixty, and the arrangements were well managed by Mr. Joe Lawrence.

The following amounts have been collected for the Music Hall Home by the Harvey Boys:—D. Harvey, 1s.; F. Harvey, 1s. Frank Folloy, 1s.; Mrs. D. Harvey, 1s.; Bob, 1s.; Sam Vincent, 1s.; Ben Albert, 1s.; Keir and Kempton, 1s.; Chas. Coverdale, 1s.; Leo Derender, 1s.; Sylvester, 1s.; J. K. Newsome, 1s.; Maurin, 1s.; Rose Elliott, 1s.; Mon. Bentley, 1s.; total 15s.

Miss Daisy Dormer is making a big success at the Tivoli with her two numbers, "I wish I were you" and "I'm going, I'm going—I'm gone." She is also scoring with "I want a girl" at Balham. Next week Miss Dormer will sing a new song, entitled "Out in Manilla." The charming coon artist will leave London on Aug. 5 to fulfil four special starring engagements in the provinces, after which she will return to town till the pantomime season at Glasgow claims her services as principal girl at the Theatre Royal.

Miss Lil Hawthorne's songs fairly caught on during her recent engagement at Douglas, Isle of Man. No matter what part of the island you went, you could hear the crowds either whistling or singing "Bye-bye, my sailor boy," "Mary's a grand old name," and "My castle in Spain."

Mr. Alec Hurley, the famous coster comedian, will present on Monday his new song-scena, The Coster's Beanfeast, at the Hackney Empire. The scene depicted faithfully represents a certain phase of cockney life, and the company engaged by Mr. Hurley being Londoners to a man and woman, every justice is done to the remarkable characteristics of London's poorer classes.

Dolly, Agnes, and Maud, the Staffordshire Factory Nightingales, have, during their two weeks' rest at Wolverhampton, where they reside, received many contracts from two well-known London agencies. They resume business on Monday at the Hippodrome, Preston.

Miss Zona Joy has been compelled to refuse a tempting offer for abroad owing to pantomime arrangements that cannot be altered.

Intending holiday-makers may be well advised to secure a copy of the admirable Tourist Guide to the Continent, published by the Great Eastern Railway Company, in which descriptive accounts of all the places of interest in Holland, Germany, Belgium, Switzerland, and other countries are contained. The book is admirably printed, and is embellished by beautifully-toned illustrations of great Continental cities, as well as maps of historic resorts. It is edited by Percy Lindley, and published at 6d.

A grand smoking concert was given on the 17th inst. by the Ventnor District Urban Council to the delegates of the same community from all parts of England and Wales. Nearly every town of importance was represented, the visitors numbering 400.

Mr. F. V. St. Clair has produced "The Peace Congress," a number reminding us of his former successes in this class of song. Mr. Albert Williams, the comedian of Mount and Williams's sketch company, has produced a fine comedy number from Mr. St. Clair's ever-busy pen. It is entitled "My wonderful lamp."

Messrs. John P. Harrington and Jas. W. Tate are combining business with pleasure at Brighton next week, whither they go, by special invitation from Miss Marie Lloyd, to equip England's queen of comedy with a record répertoire of new songs, wherewith to conquer America when she goes to the land of Uncle Sam in September.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

J. T. NIBBET (Liverpool).—Lady Madcap was originally produced at the Prince of Wales's Theatre on Dec. 17, 1904, with Mr. G. P. Huntley as Trooper Smith and Mr. George Carroll as Corporal Ham. Miss Adrienne Augarde was the original Lady Madcap. Mr. Edmund Payne was not in the cast, as he was in The Orchid at the newly-opened Gaiety at the time.

ELLA FOSTER.—The Royal Victoria Coffee Tavern or the New Victoria Palace is the latest name of the house originally called the Coburg, opened on May 11, 1818, and so named in compliment to Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg, afterwards King of the Belgians. The venture was the project of Mr. Joseph Glossop, who had partners, but at the end of the second year became sole lessee. Harry Kemble, the nephew of the illustrious John Kemble, played there. During the first season twenty-four pieces were produced there. We cannot say whether the house had a Royal box. There were two tiers of boxes, so in all probability it had.

M. STANLEY CLARK.—We have made exhaustive inquiries and have instituted a search, but are unable to give any information about an adaptation of Ouida's "Strathmore." It might have been a tentative and unsuccessful production. We are still inquiring, and will give you in this column any information that comes to hand.

CONVILLE (TEMPLE-ROW, BIRMINGHAM).—Sir Henry Irving at the time of his death was sixty-seven. His elder son, Henry Brodribb Irving, was born in London on Aug. 5, 1870, and his younger son, Laurence Sidney Irving, on Dec. 21, 1871. H. B. is married to Miss Dorothea Baird, the original Trilby on the English stage; and L. S. to Miss Mabel Hackney.

E. M.—Sir Henry Irving was originally the chief actor under the Bateman management at the Lyceum, when that theatre was taken over in September, 1871, by Colonel H. L. Bateman. The Lyceum passed under Sir Henry's own management on Monday, Dec. 30, 1878, when Hamlet was revived, Miss Ellen Terry making her first appearance at the house in the character of Ophelia.

FRANCIS.—We know nothing of the gentleman you name. The European representatives of the firm are advertised as Mr. H. H. Feiber, Mr. H. B. Marinelli, and W. Passpart. If you write to Mr. H. B. Marinelli, 29A, Charing Cross-road, W.C., you will obtain correct information.

WOOLWICH HIPPODROME.

Agreeably with what has become an invariable custom, the best talent available is provided for the delectation of the numerous patrons of this hall, and the crowds that nightly fill this commodious house testify that the fare placed before them is highly appreciated, while the comfort of all is well looked after by the genial manager, Mr. A. W. Deer. The shield presented by The Era, and won at the recent sports by a team representing the staff of this theatre occupies a prominent position in the vestibule, where all and sundry can view and admire.

Figuring largely in this week's bill are Mr. Geo. D'Albert and Co., in a dramatic episode, entitled 'Tis never too late to mend, a playlet founded on Mr. Charles Reade's famous novel. The chaplain of the prison, cleverly represented by Mr. Geo. D'Albert, while endeavouring to prevent the escape of one of the convicts, who turns out to be his own brother, is accidentally shot by one of the warders. The scene portraying the quarries is realistic and well-executed. Mr. Harry Tate's company in Motoring keep the house in roars of laughter. A flattering reception is bestowed on "Mr. C," who tells some very amusing stories, and is gifted with an excellent tenor voice which he uses with fine effect, a song he sings in "falsetto" being well rendered. Miss Maud Courteney is also a good story teller and singer, and in a tuneful song is assisted by "Mr. C" stationed in the balcony. The Korseys introduce a novel instrument, consisting of twenty-five various sized revolving discs on which are strung wires, their playing on which is greeted with hearty applause. Mr. George French, a character humorist and descriptive comedian, keeps the audience amused, especially in the song "Out of the working classes." Ada Cerito is a clever comedienne, her song, "You're not the only, only girl," set to a catchy refrain, being heartily taken up by the audience. Her second effusion, in which she describes the consequences of her husband being a football devotee, produces much laughter. There is also a lively time when Woodhouse and Wells hold the boards, their patter, song, and dance meriting hearty approval. Nellie Emerald, a noteworthy comedienne, and the Imperial Bioscope, with two amusing films depicting the Heiress Cook and the Smoking Chimney, bring the programme to a happy conclusion.

THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT FOR ACTOR AND COMPOSER, BY ALBERT A. STRONG, LL.B. (Lond.).

Chapter I

Chapter II.
PERFORMING RIGHT.

Chapter III.

Chapter IV.
MUSICAL COPYRIGHT.

Chapter V.
INTERNATIONAL AND COLONIAL COPYRIGHT.

"The Law of Copyright for Actor and Composer," by Albert A. Strong, LL.B., solicitor, author of "Dramatic and Musical Law" ("The Era" office), seems to be the one compendious and indispensable authority on the subject, as vexed as the "Bermoothes" and as tortuous as a Chancery suit, that has long been wanted. It is in every essential a text book for the perplexed layman, and no solicitor or barrister worth his salt ought to think of taking or appearing in "proceedings" without consulting its pages. It must suffice, after what has been said, to state little more than that the contents include five chapters, respectively named "Copyright as Opposed to Performing Right," "Performing Right," "Infringement and Remedies," "Musical Copyright," and "International and Colonial Copyright." The work, for all its precise authority, is not dry reading. The statutes, with the elucidatory notes, necessarily impose a task on the reader which takes some tackling, but they had to be there. The cases adduced, however, are full of interest. Certain of them might fitly find a place in the romance of copyright. There was the fight of Charles Reade with George Conquest over "It's Never Too Late to Mend," for instance, and the equally interesting conflict of Mr. J. A. Cave with Chatterton over "The Wandering Jew." The latter was a famous battle. Chatterton took it to the House of Lords, and was finally beaten, to the unspeakable relief of Mr. Cave, who is never weary of relating the story. Had the result been otherwise, it would have meant his ruin. I well remember meeting him on the day of his victory and "crashing a cup with him" in honour of the same. "The Law of Copyright" is dedicated to Mr. A. W. Pinero.—Sportsman.

THEATRICAL TRUSTS.

The mystery which still surrounds the intentions of the enterprising firm of KLAW and ERLANGER respecting an alleged theatrical or variety "Trust" in Europe still remains unsolved; and the report that the large capital of twenty millions has been devoted by a syndicate to this extraordinary object adds to the curiosity created by the rumour. Accounts of the projects of American speculators have to be taken with the proverbial grain of salt; but the success of the Theatrical Trust in America and the wide scope of its operations make anything in connection with Transatlantic finance possible. The latest information on the subject is supplied by Mr. LEVY MAYER, the legal representative of the firm of KLAW and ERLANGER, who has been interviewed immediately on his arrival in Plymouth on the Kronprinz Wilhelm. He states that the business that he has in hand for his clients is entirely separate from what is known in the United States as the United States Amusement Company, and from the so-called Theatrical Syndicate.

The object which Messrs. KLAW and ERLANGER have in view is the purchase of "theatrical royalties" in various parts of Europe and the United States. These "royalties" are not, as would be imagined, authors' fees, but playhouses, which are to be "conducted on the American system." Messrs. KLAW and ERLANGER "desire to control the pick of the profession, and to have under their direction the best artists in the world; in short, to have at their disposal the very best that money can secure."

The idea of all the best actors and actresses in England and on the Continent being under the "control" of Messrs. KLAW and ERLANGER is, at first sight, somewhat startling; but there is nothing impossible in it, though the attainment of the result would certainly take time. We have an "object lesson" on the subject in the United States, where the Theatrical Trust controls the greater number of the "provincial" playhouses. Putting the natural prejudice against the Trust system in Art matters aside, we find that the American Theatrical Trust works better than might have been expected. Mr. E. S. WILLARD, who has travelled a great deal in the States, speaks highly of the convenience of dealing with it when on tour. But the most curious result of the Trust domination is the character of many of the plays produced. The "advanced" drama with an ethical purpose is more common in America than it is in England, where its production is chiefly confined to the performances of private societies. This, however, is not due to the influence of the Trust. Sharp men of business as its magnates are, they simply supply the national demand; and if the Americans are more curious and more catholic in their tastes than we are, the fact has nothing to do with the existence of a "combine." But we have to remember that the ground covered by travelling companies is much larger in America in proportion to the amount of original production, while a great deal of the latter is imported from countries not yet in the grip of the Trust.

The tendency of the time is undoubtedly towards the wholesale organisation of all manufacture. In the times of CHIPPENDALE and HEPPLETHWAITE, beautiful furniture was made which held together till the last stick of it was destroyed. Then came the epoch of large furniture factories, in which everything was made by machinery; followed by a revolt so strenuous that every bit of "old furniture" in the country was bought up, and the manufacture of "antique" chairs and tables had to be commenced to meet the demand. The tendency of wholesale control is to depress individuality and to cause the degeneration of Art. As Sir CHARLES WYNDHAM says, "Art cannot be developed by trusts in the same way that it can be, and is, by individual exertion, where personal ambition comes in, and, if you like, personal vanity." We see the effect already in America. Where is the American actor who holds the position of BOOTH or FORREST? Where is the American playwright who can be compared to Mr. PINERO or Mr. H. A. JONES? What are the American plays that rank with such pieces as Nero and His House in Order? In the lighter forms of entertainment, which are more a matter of manufacture, and can be, to a great extent, turned out ad. lib., the output, on a purely business basis, may be satisfactory; but nothing even approaching a masterpiece can be produced in such circumstances. The American play-market is chiefly supplied by importations. The tours of our actors in America are nearly always successful; but all the goodwill in the world cannot blind us to the fact of the moderate prosperity of many of our visitors from across the Atlantic. The existence of a national drama depends upon the encouragement of individual exertion. It is not enough that an artist should feel himself "in comfortable circumstances." What he wants, if he has the soul of an artist, is what used to be called Fame. He wants the general acknowledgment of his genius; the applause of his fellow-men—and women. It is a common practice of the artist to conceal this feeling behind a mask of mercenary motive, so as to protect himself from the ridicule of the average Philistine. But nothing is more certain than the power of personal vanity and its overmastering influence on the actions and efforts of men. So far as a trust tends to crush and kill this feeling, and to make the artist a mere machine working under the "control" of, and for the benefit of, a "syndicate" of capitalists, it injures Art, and finally reduces it to bankruptcy. Nothing is ever done well under the sole influence of what CARLYLE calls the "cash nexus." The English stage is, and always has been, rich in individuality. Actors like Sir CHARLES WYNDHAM, Mr. BEERBOHM TREE, Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER, Mr. CYRIL MAUDE—indeed, all our leading actors of to-day—stand out distinctively as individuals. Authors like Sir W. S. GILBERT and Mr. BARRIE are equally "original." All interesting Art is full of character. We should postpone to the last possible moment the time when Mediocrity and Manufacture shall give the tone to the English stage, and a short-sighted commercialism shall crush out all but the lower and cheaper forms of artistic effort.

THE HIPPODROME.

Miss Alice Norton has discovered a powder by the instrumentality of which she is able to manufacture rubies. She is exhibiting her most interesting process at the London Hippodrome. Despite her English name, Miss Norton has some difficulty in expressing herself in that language, as she was born and educated in Vienna. Throughout the German Empire lady chemists are fairly plentiful, and are employed in factories where any chemical preparation is used in the manufacture of goods. So Miss Norton became a student of chemistry when seventeen at the Zurich Polytechnic. She studied for seven years under Prof. R. Pictet, who discovered liquid air. It was only last November that Miss Norton discovered the secret powder that enables her to make precious stones of the requisite hardness. She takes a quantity of ordinary London clay and places it in a great crucible made of magnesium. She next adds chromic acid in given quantities and then a powder, the composition of which is only known to herself. A temperature of 5,000 Fahr. is generated. This first boils the mixture and then bakes it, for within five minutes a mass of quartz is formed that requires a heavy hammer to break it. In this mass of quartz a large number of rubies of varying sizes are found, and there is an eager demand for Miss Norton's gems when she distributes them. The turn is highly interesting.

A novelty first introduced to the London public on Monday by Mr. Fred Trussell is found in the Black Hussars, a troupe of fourteen, who come from the States. The marches played are of the Sousa type, and the team play with precision and tunefulness, and though the act is described as the "Bass Drum Trust," there is not too much trust in that instrument.

Zuyder Zee, the farcical Dutch sketch, has been pulled together since the night of production. The ice and water carnivals produce hearty laughter, and in the conspiracy of fun Hess and Lisbon are agreeably prominent, as well as the Ashley Team, the Snow Family, and the Four Figaros. Miss May Moore Duprez's Greta has become quite a favourite Hippodrome heroine, and the doings of Mr. Tom Shale, Mr. J. H. Milburn, and Mr. Bert Gilbert supply the droll essentials of a spectacle that does immense credit to the inventive genius of Mr. Frank Parker, who has been ably backed up by Mr. Bruce Smith in the scenic department. The picturesque dresses are by Morris Angel and Son, and Willie Clarkson has done the wigging.

Of the variety items, none is more attractive than the act of Alfred Loyal, who has one of the cleverest performing black poodles that it has ever been our lot to witness. This dog, with wonderful aplomb and smartness, somersaults from a spring plank over a horse's back and over the heads of seven men. He replies to his master's question, "Are you ready?" with a gentle bark, and thoroughly enjoys his work. Lloyd's Siberian greyhounds also submit a clever performance, which is presented by Paulin Viola and Nellie Lloyd; the Trafnell Family sustain their well-known reputation as acrobats; Leonard Gautier's performing ponies are pretty little creatures; and Tofts' statuary, Leipsig (conjurer), the Macarte Sisters, and Paul Conchas are also in the bill, which is further diversified by the American Bioscope and the Chronomegaphone.

THE Music Hall Home is in a flourishing position; considerably better, in fact, than it has been since its commencement, and Mr. Harry Barnard, the chairman, voices the thanks of the committee to those ladies and gentlemen who have so generously contributed towards its support. The New Year appeal in our columns has had a very satisfactory result, for which the committee tender their thanks to the organising efforts of Mr. F. H. Pedgrift, the hon. treasurer. The M.H.A.R.A., by a handsome donation of a hundred guineas, and the committees of the Liverpool Gala (£40), the Belfast Theatrical Charity Fund (£10), and the Birmingham Charity Sports (£10) have also recognised, in a kindly, practical way, the usefulness and importance of the charitable work of the Home, which has now a balance of over £400 to its credit. The general meeting will be held at the Camberwell Palace on Tuesday next, at 3 p.m., when all connected with the music hall profession are cordially invited.

THE first performance of a bright little sketch, in one scene, entitled A Little Piece of Cake, by Max Rae and Leo Diensis, took place this week at the Ealing Hippodrome, where it was extremely well received by an appreciative audience. It was cleverly rendered by Miss Aimée Fowler (Meg), Mr. Reginald Herbert (Bobbie, her fiancé), and especially by Miss Nancy Borrett, who, as Meg's mother, acted in admirable fashion and danced well. The music is from Mr. Louis Hillier's skilful pen, and besides the above-mentioned dance, we noticed a bright Spanish bolero (Miss Fowler) and a capital love-song, "Heart's roses" (Mr. Herbert). The artists were recalled several times.

MR. CHARLES MUSSETT is the happy father of a little girl presented to him on Tuesday. Mr. Mussett was lately the manager of the Empire, Glasgow, and is now hustling ahead for R. G. Knowles.

AT the Hippodrome, Putney, during the present week, a clever and funny act is being given by Les Ralli. The antics of the monkey are absolutely lifelike, and must be the result of a close study of nature on the part of the performer. It certainly compares most favourably with those clever artists who have passed away—Chas. Lauri and James Dubois.

THE L.C.C. AND AMUSEMENTS.

The usual weekly meeting of the London County Council was held on Tuesday at the County Hall, Spring Gardens, Mr. Percy Harris (chairman) presiding.

"PARIS IN LONDON."—ANOTHER OFFER.

The Improvements Committee brought up a report with reference to a proposal for an option of a lease for ninety-nine year, at a rent of £55,000 a year, of the central portion of the crescent site formed in connection with the Holborn to Strand improvement. The site has an area of about 124,000 square feet, and lies between Aldwych and the Strand. The proposal has been made by M. Ernest Gerard on behalf of a syndicate who have prepared a scheme for developing the site as a whole. On the central portion, with a frontage to Aldwych, it is proposed to erect a stone building of commanding architectural features. This building will contain large galleries, for use in connection with a permanent exhibition of arts and manufactures; it will also contain a theatre, a concert hall, and a restaurant, with courts around. In the theatre such facilities for refreshment will be provided as are usually allowed in theatres licensed by the Lord Chamberlain. The lease will provide that these facilities will be afforded only while performances are being given in the theatre, and that they will be in strict accordance with the regulations of the Lord Chamberlain governing such cases. The Committee considered that the acceptance of the present offer would have a beneficial effect as regards the disposal of the Council's remaining surplus land. The cost of the new buildings is estimated at £500,000; and it was proposed that the rent for the first year be a peppercorn, for the second year £13,750, for the third year £27,500, and for the fourth year £41,250.

Sir John Benn, M.P., said he saw no reason for opposing the recommendation of the Committee in favour of accepting the proposal, provided that no saloon bars were permitted in the building.

In response to a suggestion by Sir Melvill Beachcroft, Lord Elcho, chairman of the Improvements Committee, agreed to make it a condition precedent to the taking up of the option by M. Gerard that the deposit of £5,000 should be paid within fourteen days.

With this alteration the recommendation was then agreed to.

LIVING STATUARY.

The Theatres and Music Halls Committee reported as follows:—The management of the Oxford Music Hall have asked us whether the resolution of June 25, 1907, "That the proprietors of London music halls and other places of public entertainment be informed that, in the opinion of the Council, the continuance of living statuary exhibitions is undesirable," applies to the exhibition known as Dr. Angelo's Living Porcelains, now being given at the Oxford Music Hall. From a report which has been made to us, it appears that this exhibition is free from anything undesirable. The Committee accordingly recommended that the resolution of June 25 do not apply to the performance in question.

The Hon. H. Lygon asked the Chairman (Mr. Greenwood) if he was perfectly sure there was nothing libidinous about the "Porcelains."

The Rev. Stewart Headlam inquired if the Bishop of London had given his sanction to the performance.

Mr. Greenwood said he had not visited the entertainment himself, but he had caused one of the Council's inspectors to do so; and it was upon his report that the Committee's observations were made. The officer stated that in his opinion there was nothing in the "Porcelains" to which the Council could take exception. They were representations of well-known figures. He was not able to say whether the Bishop of London had seen the show.

The recommendation was then adopted.

FINSBURY PARK EMPIRE.

The Committee reported that the Council on Nov. 25, 1905, and Oct. 16, 1906, approved drawings submitted by Messrs. F. Matcham and Co., on behalf of Moss' Empires, Limited, showing the arrangements proposed to be adopted in the erection of a music hall, to be known as the Finsbury Park Empire, on a site at the junction of St. Thomas's-road and Prah-road, Finsbury Park. Application for a music and dancing licence for the premises was made at the Licensing Sessions in 1905 and 1906, but was refused. Messrs. Matcham and Co. state that their clients propose renewing their application at the Licensing Sessions to be held in November, 1907, and they ask the Council to renew its approval of the drawings in question. The Committee considered that the request might be complied with, and recommended accordingly, the necessary certificate to be granted on the Council being satisfied that the premises have been completed in accordance with the drawings referred to, and also that certain specified conditions have been complied with.

Agreed to.

THE SOUTH LONDON.

The Committee reported that they had considered a drawing, submitted by Messrs. Wylson and Long, showing the proposed reseating of the balcony and gallery of the South London Music Hall, and in connection therewith, the covering of the flooring and risers with hard wood, in order to comply with certain of the suggestions of the Council for the structural improvement of the premises. The Committee recommended that no objection be offered to the proposals, subject to a sufficient number of steps being provided, in order to make up the difference in levels between the prompt and the o.p. sides of the gallery.

The recommendation was approved.

WALWORTH EMPIRE.

The Committee had also considered the drawing submitted by Mr. J. F. Parker, showing the arrangements in connection with the provision of two exit doors from the stage and dressing-rooms, and of two fire-resisting rooms, intended to enclose the dressing-room space at the Walworth Empire, Montpelier-street, Walworth, and recommended that no objection be offered to the proposals, provided that certain specified condition be complied with.

Agreed to.

LICENSING ADVERTISEMENTS.

The Committee brought up a report having reference to Nos. 7 and 13 of the licensing orders as to music, music and dancing, and also stage plays licences. They recommended the withdrawal of these two orders and the substitution of new ones, as they considered it undesirable to prescribe the papers in which advertisements of applications should be advertised; and as it was important that notice of any intended application for a new licence, or for the removal or modification of the conditions attached to an existing licence, should be given in the locality in which premises were situated, the Committee were of opinion that applicants should be allowed to advertise in local newspapers.

Approved.

THE CRITERION.

The Building Act Committee recommended that consent be given to the erection of an iron or glass shelter in front of the Criterion Theatre and the Criterion Restaurant on the southern side of Piccadilly, as shown on the plans dated July 15, submitted with the application of Messrs. W. Woodward and Sons, on behalf of Messrs. Spiers and Pond and Sir Charles Wyndham, such consent being subject to the usual conditions.

Agreed to.

MR. EDITOR,—Sir,—In your notice for Satan's Angel; or, The Betrayer, you mention in to-day's issue Miss Freda Sharlotte as Cora. The part was played by yours faithfully, MABEL WYNN, Queen's Music Hall, Poplar, July 20, 1907.

MR. TATE'S "MOTORING."

INJUNCTION FOR INFRINGEMENT.

A case which lasted for two days was heard before Mr. Justice Phillimore in the King's Bench Division, on Monday and Tuesday, when Mr. Harry Tate, the well-known comedian, and proprietor of the sketch, entitled Motoring, brought an action against Mr. William Fullbrook, claiming an injunction of an infringement of his rights, the allegation being that the defendant produced, under the title of Astronomy, a sketch which was an imitation of Motoring. The result was that judgment was entered for Mr. Tate for the nominal damages of forty shillings and costs, and his Lordship granted an injunction in the terms asked for.

Mr. McCall, K.C., and Mr. Turner (instructed by Messrs. Burton, Yeates, and Hart) appeared for the plaintiff; and Mr. Hohler, K.C., and Mr. G. A. Scott (instructed by Messrs. Amery, Parkes, and Co.) were for the defendant.

Mr. Harry Tate, in answer to questions put by his counsel, stated that his sketch, Motoring, was first of all a speciality in a pantomime, which was produced at the Theatre Royal, Leeds, on December 26, 1902. On the following June 25 he registered the title. Since 1902 he had played this sketch both in London and the provinces, with success. The defendant was in his employment from the termination of the pantomime.

On January 21, 1907, he wrote to the defendant:

DEAR FULLBROOK,—Do you think you are playing the game? I refer to your show in pantomime, in which you have stolen all my business from my different numbers. I should like to know what you have to say in the matter.—Yours faithfully,
HARRY TATE.

Fullbrook replied as follows:—

DEAR MR. TATE,—Your letters to hand. I did not think there was any need to answer. Am playing a little number of my own, and fail to see where the seriousness of the matter comes in.—Yours faithfully,
W. FULLBROOK.

On January 29 he wrote in answer:—

DEAR MR. FULLBROOK,—In answer to yours: You fail to see where the seriousness comes in. I will explain. I produce numbers and also pay royalties. Some are successful, some are not; and it is a big drain on my purse to find such numbers. Those that are successful are my living. The following are what you term your own:—

(1) To start with, you adopt my make-up.
(2) You work my cracker business, taken from Motoring.
(3) You take my boy (Charley Williams), and place him the same as in Motoring.
(4) You have the walking race across, taken from Motoring.
(5) You have the tramp, who has "walked all the way from Manchester, &c.," taken from my Gardening sketch.
(6) You have the son, as in Motoring, excepting that he says "dada" instead of "papa."
(7) You have the golfer walking across and hitting you with his golf club, as in my sketch, Golfing.
(8) You change hats with the kid, as in Motoring.

Are these your own?

I have always considered you a man above this kind of thing, and I am now asking you in all seriousness to stop it.

If you have anything of your own, and I can do anything for you, I shall be only too pleased, as I have no grievance against you whatever; but I am not going to allow you or anyone else to work my business without taking action in the matter.—Yours faithfully,
HARRY TATE.

Describing his own and the defendant's sketches, Mr. Tate said: In Motoring I have a motor-car, with a chauffeur, and a man at the side who hollows out, "Where are you going to?" I say, "I am going down to Portsmouth." I tell him that the distance is ninety miles. He asks how long it will take to do the journey. I say, "It will take half an hour—I don't think." Then the car explodes, and we get out and repair it. A little boy comes along with a mouth organ. The defendant has a telescope upon the stage, and he does a little dialogue. He is dressed exactly the same as I am. As soon as he starts to work on the telescope he begins to do the same business as I do in Motoring. The small boy comes on with a mouth organ and sometimes with a tin whistle. My small boy bends down and looks underneath the car, and in the defendant's piece the boy gets under the sticks of the telescope. The two boys are also told: "Get out of the way. Tell your mother I hate the sight of you." In the telescope piece the son comes on in the same make-up as my own boy, and he uses the same words. In both pieces the boy is pushed over. In the defendant's sketch there is precisely a similar character to my drunken man, both wearing a muffler. A man goes across and throws a penny on the stage in my sketch, and it also occurs in the defendant's. The phrase "I don't think" occurs several times in my sketch, and it is also used in the defendant's piece.

Proceeding, Mr. Tate said that the curtain went down on a fight in each sketch, and each lasted about twenty-five minutes. When he visited the Holloway Empire and saw Astronomy, the defendant addressed the audience thus: "Ladies and gentlemen—I will give you an imitation of Mr. Harry Tate." He spoke to the defendant the same night, and told him that he was acting in a very bad way, as he (Mr. Tate) was engaged to apear at the Holloway Empire six weeks later. Both he and the defendant were booked for the Stoll tour. The defendant's sketch had interfered with his business to the extent that he did not get as many laughs as he used to get, and there was a difficulty in getting dates.

Cross-examined, the plaintiff stated that the defendant asked for a cheaper price than he did. The defendant had preceded him on the Stoll tour, and he (plaintiff) felt "weak" all round the tour. The manager of the Holloway Empire (Mr. Adams) had said to him, referring to the fact that Fullbrook had been before him with the sketch, Astronomy, "It's a crib and a bit rough on you." A similar remark was made by the manager of the Shepherd's Bush Empire. Motoring had been running since its production at Leeds pantomime, and he had employed Fullbrook to take his part in a separate company on tour, which went under the name of "Harry Tate's Company." He had never billed Fullbrook as "Harry Tate." In both his and the defendant's piece there was a knock-kneed boy who made a noise with his mouth and caused a cracker to explode. Sometimes in the defendant's piece the word "absolutely" was substituted for "I don't think."

Mr. Harry Masters, Mr. Harry Kennedy (plaintiff's manager), Mr. Logan (of Liverpool), Mr. Wilson Hallett, Mr. Ernest Cadle, Mr. Fredk. Wilson (stage-manager, Holloway Empire), and Mr. Walter Pink (who wrote the sketch from a skeleton supplied) all gave evidence in support of the plaintiff's case.

Mr. Hohler, K.C., took up the examination of his client on the second day, and the defendant's evidence amounted to a denial of all that the plaintiff and his witnesses had alleged. The boy in his sketch did not use the phrases complained of, nor was there a drunken man. He himself had assisted in building up the sketch, Motoring.

Mr. J. Elliston, the managing-director of the Grand Theatre and Theatre Royal, Bolton, said he had had both the plaintiff and the defendant in his theatres, he had seen both sketches, and did not consider there was any greater similarity between them than there was between the majority of pieces of that class.

Mr. Fredk. Baugh, general-manager for Mr. Frank Macnaghten; Mr. Maurice Voiny, business-manager of the Standard Music Hall, Pimlico; Mr. Thomas Claxton, agent; Mr. George Sheldon, author, composer, and theatrical-manager; and Mr. J. J. Jordan, comedian, were of the opinion that the defendant had not copied the plaintiff's work.

After listening to arguments by counsel, Mr. Justice Phillimore said that in some French and other plays brought over to this country the whole plot was conveyed by gesture, and his Lordship, in giving judgment, said he thought there had been an imitation by defendant of plaintiff's sketch, and granted the injunction asked for restraining defendant from producing Astronomy in such a way as to infringe plaintiff's rights. Defendant must alter his piece in such a way that it was no longer an imitation. On the points of law raised, his Lordship said he was of opinion that Motoring was a dramatic sketch within the meaning of the Act, and that plaintiff was rightly registered as the author.

"THE RING BETWEEN."

Sketch, in One Scene, by William Felton, Produced at the Middlesex Music Hall, on Monday, July 22.

Sir David Denham .....MR. WILLIAM FELTON
Leon De Roche .....MR. MARTIN SANDS
Matthews .....MR. EDWARD DE VERE
Margery Faversham .....MISS HILDA GREY
Stella .....MISS GERALDINE MONTROSE

A problem playlet made its appearance at the Middlesex on Monday, when Mr. Wm. Felton's latest work was produced. The little piece has some thrilling episodes, and a dramatic dénouement is reached. Mr. Felton touches upon the sins of a section of society, and draws a sharp distinction between the justice meted out to the erring woman and that allotted to the equally culpable man. Excuse for the title is evidently given by the electric bell which is attached to the flat of a certain Stella, and which sounds at momentous parts of the proceedings. The lady is expecting a visit from her lover, Sir David Denham, a Cabinet Minister, who is about to marry the youthful Margery Faversham, and has come to bid his mistress good-bye, and to settle an annuity upon her. Stella clings to the hope that Sir David will, after all, remain faithful to his old love, and has contrived that Margery shall be present unseen at the interview, and thus be deterred from marrying David—a scheme which fails in its object. Stella has an accomplice in an adventurer named Leon De Roche, who is anxious to secure a dispatch which Sir David carries with him, and urges Stella to obtain possession of it, promising to make her his wife. Stella succeeds in getting the dispatch from Sir David, and hands it to De Roche, but the baronet, discovering his loss, returns and entreats Stella to restore the document, pleading that if the papers were to fall into the hands of a foreign power a terrible European war would be precipitated. Stella is obdurate until Sir David refers to the wife and family of the man who had just promised her marriage. She at once decides to return the dispatch, and scarcely has De Roche given it up than he is killed by a bullet from Stella's revolver. Sir David leaves with a few parting words of advice, but Stella goes into an adjoining room, and a pistol shot rings out, telling the awful tale of self-destruction.

The sensational effect of the piece was thoroughly maintained by the company to whom its interpretation was entrusted. The author himself acted with quiet dignity in the part of the Cabinet Minister. Mr. Felton's elocution is admirable, and he gave emphasis to every point in the dialogue which fell to him. Miss Geraldine Montrose exhibited tragic power in the rôle of the unfortunate Stella, giving vivid expression to the vindictive tirades against the social conventions which are liberally provided in the piece. Mr. Martin Sands made the most of the unscrupulous Leon De Roche; and the small part of Margery was gracefully played by Miss Hilda Grey.

"MY LADY'S CHAMBER."

A Comedy Sketch, by R. Royston-Dene, presented at the Bedford Music Hall, Camden Town, on Monday, July 22.

Lord Newcombe .....MR. R. ROYSTON-DENE
Rosetta .....MISS SHEELAH DESMOND

Mr. Royston-Dene gives us some very amusing "situations" and some very amusing "lines" in this comedietta, which has proved highly entertaining to audiences at the Bedford this week. Lord Newcombe contrives to gain admittance to the private chambers of Lady Barrington, and when her ladyship's maid has retired from the room he locks the door. Of course, Lady Barrington is indignant at his intrusion, and threatens to send for the police, but he reminds her that it is half-past eleven at night, and that, further, he is intent on very serious business with her. What does he want? Well, he would remind her ladyship that some time previously she stole a letter of his which concerned his conduct with a certain young lady. And he would further remind her ladyship that she has on numerous occasions extorted blackmail from him under threats to disclose the contents of the precious missive. He has now come to claim that letter, and to compel her most amiable ladyship to address to him a few affectionate lines in which she shall protest her undying love for him and her desire for an assignation. Lady Barrington's fury now knows no bounds. She batters impotently on the locked door; she employs all manner of threats, but to no purpose. His lordship is impervious to all her ranting and raving, and realising that it will be impossible to move him, her ladyship unwillingly falls into line with his wishes, gives him back the stolen letter, and writes, at his dictation, one that compromises herself. Her maid, Rosetta, is heard knocking at the door. Hastily Lord Newcombe dons an old dress, a "fringe," a veil, and a bonnet belonging to her ladyship, who introduces him to her maid as an estimable lady of her acquaintance. Rosetta once more leaves the room, and then Lord Newcombe destroys the objectionable letters.

Mr. R. Royston-Dene enacts the rôle of the implacable, imperturbable Lord Newcombe in a manner that at once stamps him as an actor of considerable culture and histrionic ability. As Lady Barrington Mrs. Royston-Dene treats us to a really commendable study of a woman at bay, who finds, after all, that all her artifices pale and become absolutely futile when waged against the cool determination of a man. It is a clever bit of acting. Miss Sheelah Desmond cuts a very pleasing figure as Rosetta.

BURY ST. EDMUNDS has been celebrating its past by a very fine pageant. Its name once gave that persistent joker and wit, the late Johnny Toole, a chance of playing off one of his practical jokes. He was travelling on the Great Eastern line from Ipswich to Cambridge. The train was a slow one, and the journey, in consequence, very tedious. When Bury St. Edmunds was reached the comedian was thoroughly wearied out by the length of time the train was delayed at the station. Calling a porter, he asked in a very bland manner for the stationmaster, who, all politeness, bustled up to the door of the carriage in which sat Mr. Toole, looking as solemn as a judge. "What is it, sir?" asked the official. "At what time is the funeral to take place?" inquired Mr. Toole. "Funeral, sir? Whose funeral?" inquired the now wondering stationmaster. "Whose funeral!" continued Mr. Toole; "why, have we not come to Bury St. Edmunds?" Exit stationmaster in a huff.

THE Idania Troupe of Lady Acrobats, who made their first appearance in England at the Palace, Attercliffe, with such emphatic success last week, were brought over from Berlin by that enterprising variety agent, Mr. Charles Deetrich, of Liverpool.

VARIETY GOSSIP.

MR. THOMAS BARRASFORD will open his new house in Brussels under the title of the Alhambra on Oct. 15. The establishment will be run in connection with his Paris Alhambra, which is as popular and as cosmopolitan an amusement temple—both in respect of its audiences and its companies—as any in Europe. There is no immediate prospect of the tentacles of any Klaw or other American trust getting hold of it.

MR. HAYDEN COFFIN, having made the plunge into variety at the Palace, has decided to accept an offer from Mr. Oswald Stoll to tour the Moss-Stoll Empires, and will sing both at the suburban and provincial houses owned by that leviathan combination. The popular baritone will make his first appearance at a Stoll house on August Bank Holiday. His répertoire will consist of such popular numbers as "Tommy Atkins," from A Gaiety Girl, "The Village Blacksmith," and possibly "To Anthea."

MISS DENISE ORME'S appearance at the Palace has caused some scribes to announce her début in the variety theatres. She accomplished this at the Alhambra, where she appeared for one week in July, 1905, previous to her appearance as one of the "Little Michus" at Daly's. Miss Orme's quiet, artistic style is much appreciated by Mr. Alfred Butt's patrons.

MISS VIOLET LLOYD, who has played lead at the old Gaiety with Mr. George Edwardes—notably in The Runaway Girl—has been secured by Mr. Alfred Butt for the Palace next month. Miss Lloyd, who is a cousin of Miss Lydia Thompson and Miss Violet Cameron, recently became the wife of Mr. Horace Lane, brother of Miss Grace Lane. Miss Lloyd appeared with her husband in The Dairymaids at the Apollo.

THE genius of Clarkson is known to the hemispheres. Sarah of the golden voice has acknowledged its æsthetic power, and now Willie has been gladdened by the following graceful tribute from Yvette Guilbert:—"Mon cher Monsieur Clarkson,—Grâce à vos perruques une seconde jeunesse nous revient. Vous êtes le plus grand collaborateur à la beauté féminine. Toute ma gratitude, (signed) Yvette Guilbert." This may be translated as follows:—"My dear Mr. Clarkson,—Thanks to your wigs our second youth returns to us. You are the greatest collaborateur in feminine beauty. Accept my gratitude.—Yvette Guilbert."

MR. HARRY TATE'S success in his action for infringement in the High Court on Tuesday will, it is to be hoped, act as a salutary warning to the crowd of imitators. What strikes the casual reader of the report is the ready understanding of the case by Mr. Justice Phillimore, who took a common-sense view of it. Mr. Tate pays royalties for an act that, according to expert evidence, has been copied in all important particulars by another, and this is very rightly regarded as an infringement to be stopped by legal process. The decision should have a wide-reaching effect, and prevent the practice of pirating, which is far too prevalent in the profession, besides giving a legal status to a theatrical act.

THE Dublin Saturday Herald of the 20th inst. has the following extraordinary item of news:—"Lovers of music will be pleased to hear that Miss Peggy Pryde, the popular London comedy artist—who, by the way, is a daughter of the famous Swedish nightingale, Jenny Lind—is also billed for the Empire next week"!

THIS statement is quite equalled in its veracity by the annexed extract taken from The Variety Theatre Annual, edited by Jules Inger. Speaking of the late Miss Jenny Hill, this chronicler writes that Mr. Maurice De Frece discovered her whilst she was appearing at a small music hall in a country town, and afterwards married her daughter, Miss Peggy Pryde.

THERE are other glaring inaccuracies in the volume. The late Mr. John H. Jennings is spoken of as the "proprietor of the Oxford for a number of years, and sold his interest to Mr. James Kirk." Uncle John, as his friends used to call him, would have fulfilled the chief ambition of his life had he succeeded in becoming proprietor of the hall that he had managed successfully for so many years. When its nineteen years' lease was sold to Mr. James Kirk on Oct. 28, 1890, for £27,100, it was an open secret that J. H. J. was the only opponent of the purchaser. Mr. Jennings could not sell an interest that never was his.

WE are also informed that Charles Godfrey first produced On Guard at the Paragon. That fine hall was not built until 1885—some three years after the famous sketch first saw the footlights.

AUTHORS of considerable eminence are now being pressed into the service of the variety theatres. George R. Sims, W. W. Jacobs, Alfred Sutro, the late Mr. James Davis, Charles Hannan, author of A Cigarette Maker's Romance, have all been represented in sketches and episodes; and now we hear that Mr. Keble Howard, the author of that silhouette of suburban society, "The Smiths of Surbiton," has prepared a piece for the Palace Theatre, in which both Mr. Courtice Pounds and his sister, Miss Louie Pounds, will appear. The name of it is to be Charles, His Friend. With two such talented vocalists in the cast it is hardly necessary to say that the piece is musical. Mr. Hermann Finck is responsible for the score.

MISS HENRIQUETTE MAUDE'S triumphal progress through the provinces with her sketch—describing her tour round the world, and her recitation of "Lasca" in cowboy costume—still continues. At Carlisle a man brought a pair of beautiful horses to the theatre as a gift for her, and she was sorry to have to decline her handsome present. At Hull Miss Maude kicked off the football for the local theatre team; and in one large town the management of the hall issued a card on which was printed a "limerick" about Miss Maude, the audience being invited to invent a last line.

MR. HARRY NICHOLLS will produce at the Metropolitan as a sketch The Electric Man, comedy, by Charles Hannan, author of A Cigarette-maker's Romance. The piece was originally produced at the King's, Hammersmith, in the spring of 1904, and was seen during the autumn of last year both at the Shaftesbury and Royalty Theatres. Mr. Nicholls will be supported by Mr. Loring Fernie, Mr. Thorpe Tracy, and Misses Beatrice Fitzgerald and Amy Truman. The sketch will also be seen at the Chelsea Palace.

THE Rev. J. Stephen Barrass, rector of St. Lawrence Jewry, Gresham-street, E.C., has accepted the post of hon. chaplain for Central London to the Actors' Church Union. The district includes all the leading West End theatres and halls. The object of the Union is to unite in religious work and life the men and women members of the Anglican communion who are engaged upon the theatrical and variety stage. Mr. Barrass will gladly furnish information respectnig the Union to members of the profession who wish it.

CRUIKSHANK, the clown, who appears to great advantage in his musical speciality act, which is interspersed with a number of good stories, comes of a very old circus family, and has practically been before the public since he left the cradle. He is a son of the celebrated clown of the same name.

WE understand that the Liverpool Theatres of Varieties, Ltd., have taken over the Tivoli, Park, and Paddington, formerly under the control of The Palaces, Ltd.

MR. WILL HOWGATE, the popular actor-manager of the Royal Varieties, Oldham, was presented on Monday last with a travelling-bag, dressing-case, and a purse of gold by Alderman Sixsmith on behalf of a few of his private and professional friends, as a mark of their esteem and good wishes.

SINCE Dot Stephens's reappearance on the stage after her marvellous recovery she has been the recipient of what can only be termed one continuous ovation. At Walsall every night the stage-door was thronged by enthusiastic admirers, who shouted "Good luck!" and on the Saturday it is said that there was never such a crowd as that which escorted her from the theatre, bidding her good-bye. Such-like scenes have been repeated at Bordesley Palace, in Birmingham; and this week, at Carlisle, Miss Stephens has again been the cynosure of all eyes.

MR. W. J. CHURCHILL'S enterprise at that delightful Welsh resort, Llandudno, is responsible for a fine minstrel troupe, numbering nearly a score of first-rate performers, including a double quartet and a double set of comedians. Visitors to the Happy Valley, near the Great Orme, are able to listen to harmonious glees, tuneful songs, amusing jokes, and interesting sketches, and to witness capital dancing, and fun and laughter prevail. The first vacant date of Mr. Churchill's company is Oct. 14.

ON Sunday Mr. Clayton Botham, whose name had long been prominent in Brighton, and also in Keymer, where he resided for many years, passed away on Sunday at his residence in Osmond-road, Hove, after a painful illness extending over some weeks. He was at one period associated in an important degree with the entertainment life of Brighton, having joined his brother in the raising of the Empire music hall from the modest little Oxford music hall, to the possession of which they had succeeded on the death of their mother.

THE Botham family had for a quarter of a century been associated with music-hall enterprise in Brighton, when on the site of the old Oxford in the town there arose in August, 1892, the new Empire. We may recall the fact that the Oxford, Brighton, was burnt down on March 20, 1867, when a Mr. E. N. Cruse was proprietor. The size and importance of the place may be gauged by the fact that the proprietor was only insured for £300. When a new hall was rebuilt in 1868 Mr. Botham, sen., was the proprietor, and at his death the establishment was carried on by the widow and the sons.

THE late Mr. Clayton Botham was a warm supporter of deserving movements, and also followed with interest the progress of local affairs in the district, and his advice was freely welcomed in many influential quarters. On the Keymer Council he rendered much valued service, and his worth found recognition in his unanimous election as chairman, a position he resigned this year on removing to Hove. He was persistent in placing before the public two projects which he thought of public utility—one for making a new pass over Clayton Hill at a lower level than the present road, and the other for making Shoreham Harbour a yachting centre by improvement of the lagoon at the Aldrington end. He was for a time the Keymer representative on the Cuckfield Board of Guardians and Rural District Council. He was chairman of the Keymer Flower Show Committee. The interment was in Brighton and Preston Cemetery, on Thursday.

THE directors of the Manchester Hippodrome and Ardwick Empire, associated with the Moss and Stoll enterprises, are recommending a dividend for the half-year at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, free of income-tax. This will absorb £4,500. £2,902 is to be carried to the reserve, making with the former leasehold reserve of £1,098, now no longer required, a total reserve of £4,000. The balance of £1,483 is to be carried forward, subject to the managing-directors' remuneration for the year.

INTERIM dividends at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum have also been declared by the Hackney and Shepherd's Bush Empires, and the Leicester Palace.

THE health of Mr. J. W. Chapman, the genial managing director of the Grand and Empire, Doncaster, has not, for some time at least, been of that robust character that his friends desire. During the past few days, however, more reassuring accounts have been received, and it is gratifying to learn that his condition is giving rise to less anxiety.

MISS MAUDE MURRAY was doing her aerial serpentine dance at the Hippodrome, Aldershot, on Tuesday night, when suddenly the rope attached to the wire broke, and she fell with a thud upon the stage. Both her ankles were injured, but, though suffering intense pain, she was able to appear before the curtain, and thus appease the natural anxiety of the audience. On Wednesday night she could not do her turn; but, thanks to the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Sounes, who obtained for her skilled surgical attention, she has been able to fulfill her engagement to the end of the week. Mr. Clarence Sounes had a new rope fixed, and tested it himself on Wednesday.

AN extraordinary incident happened at the Prince's Theatre, Llandudno, on Monday. On the descent of the curtain at the first house on that evening, Mr. J. Ritson, the manager, appeared on the stage, and announced that he was guaranteed that all the artists were first class, but he thought the audience would agree with him that such was not the case. Under the circumstances, he should refuse to allow the appearance of any of them, excepting the Musical Palmers. The programme for the second house and for the remainder of the week would therefore consist of the Parisian Animated Pictures and the Musical Palmers, whose turn had previously been heartily received.

MR. FRANK REED, the popular musical director of the Palace, Southampton, who severed his connection with that establishment on Saturday last to take over a similar post at the Grand, Clapham, was the recipient of a very handsomely-chased silver cigar-case, subscribed for by the members of the Palace orchestra. Mr. Trussell made the presentation in a few well-chosen remarks, and wished Mr. Reed every success in his new sphere. The ladies and gentlemen appearing at the Palace last week also presented Mr. Reed with a silver cigarette-case.

MR. EDWARD FOSTER, the resident-manager of the Bordesley Palace, is rusticating at a farm just about three miles out of Ross, Herefordshire, where the cider comes from. He is revelling in the beautiful scenery on the banks of the Wye in peaceful surroundings, where patrons cease from troubling and the telephone is at rest.

"SCENES FROM FAMOUS PLAYS," a series of striking and up-to-date dramatic excerpts, was produced on Monday at the Tivoli, Manchester. Put on and played as it is by Mr. George Langdon and his capable company, there should not be much fear of vacant dates.

THE Poplar Hippodrome, formerly the Prince's Theatre, which was opened by Mr. Clarence Sounes on Boxing Day, 1905, is to be started on August Bank Holiday with a twice-nightly variety programme. The house will be booked in conjunction with others on the Gibbons circuit.

THE plans for the alteration of Hengler's Circus, submitted by Mr. W. Hancock, of 13, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, were on Tuesday approved by the L.C.C. They comprise handsome stables, a new Royal box, and ten other private boxes. The structural alterations will facilitate the presentation of first-class circus performances, and there will be a rearrangement of the lighting. The whole of the work, including the entire redecoration and refurnishing, has been undertaken by Messrs. A. R. Dean, Ltd., of Birmingham.

HENGLER'S CIRQUS will reopen in October, when Beketow's Grand Circus from Budapest will make its first appearance in England. The famous house in Argyll-place has always had a cosmopolitan reputation, and Beketow's will be only one of many similar combinations that have made it their London home

THE M.H.A.R.A. outing on Sunday (to-morrow) will include an up-river voyage to Wallingford, Berks, with lunch and dinner en route. The train leaves Waterloo at 8.45 a.m., and the inclusive charge is £1. Tickets may be obtained at the M.H.A.R.A.'s offices, Wellington-street.

THE Grand Order of Water Rats will have its annual up-river outing on Sunday, Aug. 18, when a large party is expected on the launch, that will voyage through some of the most beautiful reaches of water bordered by picturesque Bucks and Berks.

MR. WHIT CUNLIFFE a few days since was literally the hero of a startling incident, which, but for him, would have had a tragic dénouement. He was rowing across the stream from his bungalow at Penton Hook, accompanied by a lady, and had neared a landing-stage, when the clatter of horse's hoofs was heard, and, looking up, Mr. Cunliffe beheld with horror some distance up the road a maddened horse, with cart attached, coming full-pelt towards the spot at which the comedian was about to land. The driver of the cart was making frantic attempts to free his wrists from the reins, but in vain, and horse, cart, and man tore headlong into the river. Mr. Cunliffe, who had just the time and the presence of mind to back his boat away from the spot before the plunge, was instrumental in rescuing the man in an unconscious condition. The horse was drowned.

THE Alhambra annual outing took place on Sunday. Starting from Waterloo for Guildford, the party had a most enjoyable lunch at the Lion Hotel, and afterwards a most pleasant drive to Godalming and back. Then they dined. Speeches were made at the dinner by Mr. George Scott and Mr. Harry Woodford, also by Messrs. Corrick and Roberts, and Mr. Alfred Oxley, the veteran of the staff, who was the subject of many congratulations, this being his forty-third year at the Alhambra. After dinner, on the proposition of Mr. George Scott, a collection was made on behalf of the Children's Cripple Fund, which realised over £5.

THE Chelsea Palace staff outing will take place to-morrow, when a voyage to Margate by the Palace steamer Koh-i-noor will be undertaken. Lunch will be eaten on board, and will be presided over by Mr. Norman Berlin, the manager, who is in command at the hall during the prolonged absence of Mr. Edward Swanborough.

MR. JOHN LAWSON will appear at the New Cross Empire during the coming week in a répertoire of three sketches, namely, The King's Minister, The Monkey's Paw, and Humanity. Without a doubt these are three of Mr. Lawson's finest sketches, and the Novocrucians will have the pleasure of witnessing three excellent character studies. Special scenery has been prepared, and each episode will be mounted in that lavish manner for which Mr. Lawson is celebrated.

MR. TOM LEAMORE, who is making a big success on tour, will return to the London halls on August Bank Holiday with two new songs: "When I am an angel in the sky," written and composed by himself, and another one, from the pen of C. Collins and Nat Clifford, entitled "Don't cry, dada," the chorus of which is likely to be whistled and sung all over London.

MISS ELSIE ENRY, that young and clever comedienne who of late has been making rapid progress in the music-hall profession, has decided to change her name. On and from this date Miss Enry adopts the name of Elsie Kerry, she having discovered that the name of Enry presented many difficulties of spelling and pronunciation. Miss Enry has made a hit with her Irish, coon, and Dutch ditties at the Granville, Walham Green, this week. She will next be seen under her new name at the Empress, Brixton.

A NEW sketch, entitled Edmund Kean, by Alicia Ramsey and Rudolph de Cordova, will be produced next week at the Hackney Empire. It is based on the events which occurred on that memorable Jan. 26, 1814, when Edmund Kean came from the Theatre Royal, Exeter, to his one rehearsal of Shylock which was to make his reputation. At that rehearsal, as readers of theatrical history will remember, all the actors reviled him and did their best to destroy all his effects by refusing to carry out his wishes, which were opposed to tradition. These events form the background of the sketch, which introduces the Revenge Scene from The Merchant of Venice as part of the action of the play. The cast will be as follows:—Edmund Kean, Mr. Frank Cochrane; Barrymore, Mr. Robert Forsyth; Harry Shuter, Mr. Cecil Brooking; Chas. Dunstal, Mr. Leslie Palmer; and Thomas Smedley, Mr. George Ingelton.

THE staff of the Royal Albert Palace, Canning Town, had their annual outing—the first since Mr. Arthur G. H. Hunt became proprietor of this hall—on Sunday, when a jolly party of fifty started from Canning Town at nine o'clock a.m. and boarded the train at Stratford Main for Clacton-on-Sea, which place was reached at a quarter past eleven. After the "air" had been taken in a saunter around, the whole company assembled at the Osborne Hotel for dinner, the chairman, of course, being Mr. Hunt. The loyal toasts having been duly honoured, the chairman expressed his delight at seeing so many of his staff present. It was the first occasion on which they had had an outing, and he sincerely hoped it would not be the last. The toast of "The Visitors" was proposed in a capital little speech by Mr. Alfred Levy, the vice-chairman, who echoed Mr. Hunt's sentiments. Mr. W. Hill suitably responded.

MR. F. SIMPSON, in giving "The Staff," paid a high compliment to the efficiency of the employees of the Royal Albert, and remarked that they were fortunate in having a "governor" who was in every way considerate, and who took an interest in the personal welfare of his subordinates. Mr. J. Stickels replied for the staff, and as a mark of their esteem presented Mr. Hunt with a handsome silver-mounted umbrella, which bore the following inscription: "Presented to Arthur G. H. Hunt by the staff of the Royal Albert Palace, July 21st, 1907." The afternoon was spent, according to individual predilections, in walking, driving, and sailing trips, and, after a most enjoyable day, the homeward journey was started at a quarter past eight.

LITTLE TICH has been looking up his numerous friends in Paris, and after a pleasant time goes to Blackpool on Monday for a week. He returns to the Oxford on August Bank Holiday, being one of the numerous stars secured by Mr. Blyth-Pratt.

HYMACK is the stage name of a Scottish actor, who has worked out an entertainment that is as mystifying as it is amusing. How he manages to change his gloves, ties, flowers, and sticks in full view of the audience is nothing less than marvellous. Mr. Hymack is an actor with plenty of experience, for he has served many engagements with Wm. Gillette and Mrs. Patrick Campbell, and has toured the world over. It took him five years to perfect the feats he now accomplishes.

"CYCLING IN EXCELSIS" is the title under which a new and thrilling bicycling act is billed at the London Pavilion for Monday next. The daring wheelmen who are on that occasion to make their first appearance in England are called the Three Röhrs. The chief of the band is one Charles Röhrs, and it is he who, in the culminating moments of the act, dashes round the interior of a revolving globe.

QUITE recently we witnessed a new production, Outflanked, introducing Mr. Henry Coutts, a protean artist of considerable ability. Never was the word "refreshing" more appropriately used than in connection with this act. Audiences become deeply interested in the novel situations, illustrated by specially painted scenery and superb electrical effects. Mr. Henry Coutts is a new star in the firmament, and one likely to be very popular. So delighted was Mr. Albert Bushell with the act as his top of the bill, that he has booked it for three return dates at a substantial increase.

MR. LEONARD MORTIMER, who so successfully ran the Variety Theatre, Hoxton—a year or so ago under the name of the New King's Theatre—has purchased the remaining nine years' lease, and, with the policy of a "clean sweep," engaging an entirely new stock company of actors and actresses new to the neighbourhood, having the theatre thoroughly renovated, and staging the plays in the same first-class style for which he is justly famous in the variety theatres, he hopes to build up the fortunes of the old house again. Relying on his local popularity, he is calling his property Mortimer's Theatre, Hoxton. He intends opening the theatre on Saturday, Sept. 7. Mr. Hal Brough will be his acting-manager.

MR. J. G. GRAHAME'S very successful sketch, The Yellow Fang, is the star attraction at the Euston next week. Since its last London appearance a slight alteration has been made, but the original strength, novelty, and atmosphere remain. It has been rebooked by Mr. Stoll for a long term.

THE native choir from Jamaica are still extremely successful wherever they go. Her Royal Highness Princess Henry of Battenberg and party attended their performance on Tuesday afternoon last at the Pier Pavilion, Southampton, and expressed her very great delight at their original and unique entertainment. Last week, their first performance at the Victoria Pier Pavilion, Folkestone, was attended by the Mayor and members of the Corporation, who welcomed the survivors of the earthquake to Folkestone. The Pavilion was crowded at every performance, and on Saturday last there was a public presentation to all the ladies and gentlemen of the company.

MR. JOHN W. T. STRINGER, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Stringer, a well-known name in the theatrical annals of the North, was married on Saturday last to Ethel Constance Quipp, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Quipp, the Castle, Lincoln. The bridegroom is the manager for Messrs. Rosen and Bliss, the well-known agents and proprietors.

THE huge staff of the Empire took its annual outing on Sunday, and put in some capital sports at Streatley, returning to the Caversham Bridge Hotel, Reading, for a big banquet, covers being laid for nearly 200. The beautiful prizes were presented to the winners by Mr. H. J. Hitchins, the manager, who occupied the chair, being supported by Mr. A. Aldin, the acting-manager, who acted as Judge, and Mr. Spencer Barry, the stage-manager, who acted as starter, in the sporting events. Well-known theatrical folk were present. The contests between the "front" and "back" of the house reflected the greatest credit on the sporting side of the theatre, and a highly-successful day was spent. Many of the company reached the ground by motor cars.

BEFORE his Honour Judge Parry at the Manchester County Court, on Wednesday, John Fenton Williams, a tent and sail maker, of King-street West, Manchester, sued Harry Leslie, the well-known entertainer, for the balance of the price of a canvas tent known as the Rusholme Pavilion. Defendant counter-claimed £50 damages for an alleged breach of contract by the plaintiff in supplying defective canvas, through which he said he had lost £30 in profits and had to pay £20 for repairs. Mr. Brocklehurst appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. Gibbons for the defendant.

MR. HARRY LESLIE said that a large number of his regular patrons had stayed away from the pavilion because of the rain coming through the defective roof. Several of the latter were called, and one gentleman said that he had been compelled to sit during a performance with his umbrella up. His Honour found that the sewing was badly done, but the tent was not wholly defective, and Mr. Leslie would have to pay the contract price. Therefore, on the claim there would be judgment for the plaintiff for £30 15s. On the counter-claim there would be judgment for Mr. Leslie for £21 and costs.

THE Chelsea Lodge (3098) held its regular meeting at the Town Hall, Chelsea, on Friday, the 19th, and notwithstanding the absence of several of the appointed officers through being engaged at too long a distance to admit of their returning in time to appear at their various theatres, a large amount of work was done. The lodge was opened punctually by Serpentello, the W.M., supported by Albert le Fre, I.P.M., Wolfe S. Lyon, treasurer, C. J. Doughty, secretary, Harry Bawn, S.D., and Angelo Asher, organist. The absent officers' positions were filled by Wolfe S. Lyon, S.W., Douglas White, J.W., W. Permane, J.D., and Atlas, I.G. The W.M. initiated Messrs. Harry Kato, Ted E. Box, Monte Bayly, and Tom Mellor, after which he passed Messrs. Ian Colquhoun, J. L. Graydon, and C. H. Burton. Bro. Albert le Fre then occupied the chair, and raised Messrs. R. E. Wilding, Dan Lipton, and Tom Parker. The members present, in addition to those taking office, were Messrs. James W. Mathews, Fred Neiman, Dan Lipton, Fred MacNaughton, J. B. Helm, Herbert Austin, T. Parker, Karl Hooper, and Fred Clay. As visitors there were Messrs. Frank Lister, Henry Ray, C. Smythson, Nelson Jackson, W. H. Spurgeon, D. L. Oliver, H. Chenery, and J. T. Gaffney (of the Claremont Lodge, South Africa.

MEMBERS and visitors adjourned to the Six Bells, where a pleasant hour was spent. During the time the lodge was in session a telegram of sympathy and expressions of hearty wishes for a speedy recovery was sent to Albert Christian. That gentleman has since called upon the treasurer to express his thanks for the kind sentiment conveyed in the message.

SONGS, WRITERS, AND SINGERS.

H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, President of the Associated Board of the R.A.M. and the R.C.M., has graciously accepted a beautifully bound copy of "The Irregular Scale Practice," which constitutes No. 4 of Messrs. Francis and Day's High School edition of text-books for the piano, which began with "The Complete Scale Manual for the Pianoforte." Mr. J. Simpson, the compiler of these useful standard works, which comprise six volumes, has earned the gratitude of all students of music, and M. Paderewski has expressed his high appreciation by giving special permission for the section under notice to be dedicated to himself.

ON Bank Holiday, at the Oxford, Miss Annie Purcell will again delight London audiences with Wilmott and Darewski's "In the Valley of Switzerland." These well-known writers, in conjunction with T. M. Down, have also fitted to a nicety Miss Lily Burnand with a song which, in the provinces, has taken houses by storm, and is entitled "Under the lilac tree," published by Messrs. Francis and Day; this also is likely to be heard at the Oxford on the Feast of St. Lubbock.

MR. WHIT CUNLIFFE has just placed with Messrs. Francis, Day, and Hunter a song specially written to suit his striking style, entitled "Meet me down at the corner at half-past eight." This number, which is a fine example of the work of Charles Wilmott and H. E. Darewski, jun., will be produced at Edinburgh primarily.

ADVICES from Johannesburg to Messrs. Francis and Day state that "The husking bee" cake-walk, a publication of the firm, is one of the biggest successes ever known at the Cape. It is by T. W. Thurban, who was responsible for another famous cake-walk, "The Brooklyn" to wit. Miss Lily Lena has caused a furore also in Jo'burg, having to sing no fewer than seven or eight songs nightly. She returns to England in September.

MR. TOM COSTELLO, whose "Sheeny coon," by Harry Castling, is still remembered with hilarity, will soon add to the number of his celebrated character songs a ditty, entitled "Solomon's Bride; or, I'm going to be married to-day." It is by Arthur Branscombe, author of the successful play Morocco Bound, Mr. Costello himself having composed the melody. Messrs. Francis and Day have the song in the press, and it will provide a strong comic contrast to his powerful miner song by Leigh and Pether, entitled "For Auld Lang Syne," which has just been included in the "Sixpenny Pops."

NEW songs in the press shortly to be issued by Messrs. Francis and Day are:—"Have you seen my Johnny in his uniform?" by F. J. Barnes and R. P. Weston; "Don't go until the rain stops," by G. A. Stevens; "It's good-bye to sunshine when it's good-bye to you," by Mellor, Lawrance, and Gifford; "Good—for nothing!" (sung by Johnny Warman), by F. W. Leigh; and a charming song by Edward St. Quentin, entitled "Wake me again," the words by Margaret Astrop.

YET another great success in chorus songs has just been issued by Mr. "Sixpenny Pops" Smith in the series from which he derives his sobriquet, it being Mr. George Lashwood's "In the twi-twilight." Messrs. Francis and Day are also bringing out in like form "All the days of the week" and "Happy Land."

MISS FLORRIE GALLIMORE is now busily engaged in studying three new songs which will shortly be published by the Monte Carlo Publishing Company, viz.:—"Dear little Tyrolese," by Harrington and Tate; "I'm going to try my luck in London," and a motto song by a new author, Mr. Harry Marlow. Miss Gallimore anticipates a big success with all three of these new numbers.

MISS FLORRIE FORDE and Miss Ella Retford continue to win laughter and applause for that quaint and catchy chorus song, "Has anyone seen a German band?" Pantomime producers have already started to secure the same for their forthcoming productions. No less than four applications were received during the past week by the Star Music Co., who are giving a limited number of music-hall permits for this big winner.

MR. GEORGE LEYTON has surpassed himself in his excellent rendering of Edgar and Lyle's dashing light comedy song, "You can't do without a girl." Principal boys and light comedians should make a mental note of the fact that the Star Co. have selected this as one of their few extra-special pantomime numbers. It is a big hit at numerous alfresco concerts.

A. E. RICK and Maurice Scott have "struck ile" with their melodious "Swing me higher, Obadiah." The chorus has that simple, but convincing, catchiness about it that an audience find irresistible. This is another of the Star Co.'s certs.

MISS GLADYS HUXLEY has, during the past two weeks, been causing a sensation at the Ealing Hippodrome and the Duchess, Balham, with a new song, "I've got a spooney-ooney feeling." Messrs. Mills and Scott are the fortunate writers. The song is No. 39 on the Star Co.'s catalogue.

MR. WHIT CUNLIFFE, the popular comedian, is producing a new song at Edinburgh Empire next week, entitled "Meet me down at the corner at half-past eight." It is a very bright number, with a delightfully simple, easy, and catchy chorus, and was specially written and composed for him by the well-known writers Charles Wilmott and Hermann E. Darewski, jun., who wrote George Lashwood's great chorus song, "In the twilight."

MISS MAUD ESMOND has made a very great hit at all her engagements with the charming new song, published by Mr. David Day's firm, entitled "My beautiful Avon rose," by J. F. Lambe and T. W. Thurban.

MISS BESSIE BUTT has been knocking 'em at the Stoll suburban halls with Mills and Scott's new haunter, "Pretty little maid of Norway," and judging from present results this number is likely to be one of the most popular issued by the Star Publishing Company. The number will be heard in the West-end shortly, when Miss Butt opens at the Tivoli, at which hall she will also introduce "Cherries are Blooming," which is causing a run on cherry trimmings for ladies' hats.

IN addition to the budget of new songs with which Messrs. Harrington and Tate have recently equipped Miss Vesta Victoria, that talented lady has just accepted from the same prolific author and composer two new numbers, entitled "I'm a lady" and "She'd never been away before." She has also placed a commission for three other distinct character-songs with the same firm, and purposes producing all these numbers in America when she opens there in September with Messrs. Klaw and Erlanger.

MESSRS. JOHN P. HARRINGTON AND JAS. W. TATE have during the past week been busily engaged in fitting Miss Claire Romaine with a new répertoire of songs for her forthcoming American campaign, three notable items in which are "Hurry up, William," "He's jest the bloke for me," and "What little Willie wants to know"; while her husband, Mr. Edgar Romaine, who accompanies her, will produce in America two numbers from the same pens, to wit, "When you're up" and "Come in the corner, Lucy."

The Fight for Mitcham.

Owing to the postponement of the meeting of the Mitcham Conservators from Saturday last until to-day, July 27, there has been an unfortunate delay in considering the terms of the new proposals of the Showmen's Guild, submitted on Friday last to the Board of Conservators. We hope to be able to give our readers definite news as regards the coming fair on Aug. 12 in our next issue. The rousing of Mitcham is an accomplished fact, and the champions of the rights of the people are gaining important recruits every day. The last to declare himself on the people's side is H. M. Hiles, Esq., member of the Surrey County Council. This gentleman has thrown himself whole-heartedly into the thick of the fight, and has joined the sturdy band of workers so ably led by Councillors Dant and Baker.

Stalybridge Wakes.

This capital Lancashire fixture had, as usual, a large number of high-class attractions—Colonel Clark's Coliseum of animated pictures and varieties, Captain Payne's bioscope, with up-to-date films, &c., and three or four side shows. The machine novelties were a big list, and included motor cars, switchbacks, galloping horses, racing birds, steam yachts, bicycle track, big boats and swings, by P. and J. Collins, James Hibbert and Sons, T. Hurst, T. Wingate, and W. Mitchell; shooters, throwing games, and varieties, by Burton, Jewell, Cornwell, Cordwell, White, Ingham, Thomas, H. Thomas, and others.

Rothesay, Scotland.

The show and fair-ground novelties at this fair were Salvona's circus, Testo's cinematograph theatre, Wood's school of boxers, Wilson's switchback motors, Hobday's galloping horses and steam swings, big boats, and manual swings; shooting saloons, ranges, and throwing games, by Fox, Dobbin, Shearen, Gow, and others.

SHOWMEN'S GUILD AT DEWSBURY FEAST.

The large gathering of showpeople at the meetings on the feast-ground, held in E. Farrar's cinematograph theatre, bears eloquent testimony to the awakened interest in the work of the Vandwellers' Society. The chair at the business meeting in the afternoon was taken by Mr. James Monte, who was supported by the Rev. T. Horne, organising chaplain, H. Ashington, V.P., E. Farrar, A. Tyler, J. Relph, C. Relph, D'Osta, R. Monte, Wm. Turner, J. Dobson, D. Lorenzo, A. Rhodes, Wm. Holdsworth, J. Frampton, A. Lillingston, T. Farrow, W. Shaw, C. Jameson, S. Doubtfire, Wright, Barker, J. Stiff, W. Bassett, A. Richards, J. Priest, W. Westray, G. A. Howden, F. Hilton, H. Harrington, T. Hutchinson, R. H. Williams, H. Waddington, J. Young, W. Harrington, jun., W. G. Haslam, C. Smith, and Mesdames E. Farrar, J. Cooper, and B. Howden, with a large number of the employees of the various concerns.

The Chairman's Introduction.

Mr. Monte, from the chair, briefly referred to the general object of the gathering—to hear and to understand more about the Guild and its work of trade defence. Their reverend friend, Mr. Horne, was there for that express purpose, and he had great pleasure, without any further ado, to ask Mr. Horne to deliver his address. (Applause.)

The Work of the Guild.

For well nigh twenty years, Mr. Horne said, the old Vandwellers' Society, popularly known as the Showmen's Guild, had been engaged in a crusade against the narrow-minded and puritanical sections of society, who had been trying to injure and to penalise the show business. He briefly detailed his own connection with the movement since its inception in 1889. How he had been compelled to stand out and to declare his faith in the moral and religious character of the men and women of the fair-ground. That phase of his early work was now "ancient history," but it was largely written on the pages of their corporate life during the past decade or more. He reminded them of the attacks on their life and work. These attacks were divisible under five great departments of their enterprise: (1) They had maintained the security and the sanctity of their home life. The home on wheels was subjected to all the sanitary and moral laws that governed all other homes, whether in city or village, and no more. They needed no more; they desired no less. (Cheers.) (2) Their children had now the same educational facilities as the children of town-dwellers. But he reminded them that this was not until the year 1893. Up to the Education Code of that year the school doors of the nation were practically shut against the showman's child. (Shame.) Yes, it was a shame, and so serious was this disadvantage their society brought the matter before the then Education Minister—the Rt. Hon. Arthur Dyke-Acland—who recognised the injustice, and so altered the Code that the attendance of casual children at any national school, if they only attended a day or two, increased the grant-earning power of the school; and so the Guild, in the interest of child life, threw open the schools. (Great applause.)

Free Trade in Fairs.

(3) Their Parliamentary trade defence work had secured them the recognition of free trade and no corporation monopoly in fairs. Great towns like Halifax, and corporations like Rotherham, Hyde, Colne, Eccles, and Rawtenstall, had sought monopoly powers in Private Bill leigislation, and in every case their society had been successful in defeating these public bodies. (Cheers.) Let them realise the seriousness of their position as traders had these powers been obtained against them. They had not only to defend existing fairs, as they were now doing at Mitcham and Burslem, but they had to secure the right to open up new fairs in new centres of industrial life. There were counties in the South of England where the fairs had gone down. Why? he asked. Only because the people had had to follow the work. The great industrial belt of this country, stretching from Leicester to Newcastle-on-Tyne, was peopled by millions of workers, who had to follow the changing conditions of trade and employment. Here, in these busy hives of human life, the showman had to create new fairs. (Applause.) Their society, he said, had spent thousands of pounds in Parliamentary defence and in other ways to secure to showmen the right to develop his trade and business without let and hindrance from any public body, however powerful.

No Legislative Restrictions.

(4) They had secured the same important constitutional principle for their trade as governed all other trades—that no legislation was permissible by Private Bills "in restraint of trade." Any legislation in restraint of trade must be by Public Bill, and must be introduced by the responsible Goverment of the day. (Great applause.) These were the four points of their charter of industrial freedom. This had been the outcome of their organised work for shows and showmen. They must not forget that in maintaining their fairs, in increasing their fairs, they were doing a great work for the people of the Empire. The showmen were the avowed and accepted champions of the fairs and holiday rights of the British people. This was no small work, and it won for them the sympathy and support of the great mass of the people.

Trade Defence Not All.

(5) They had other work to do, of equal moment with all that had gone before. They stood banded together for the important work of elevating and of still further popularising open-air amusements for the people. "Advance" was on their shield, as well as "Defence." They claimed to-day to have better shows and vastly more of them—more fairs and vastly better supplied than ever existed in the changing conditions of the national life. (Cheers.) They were craftsmen of a trade guild as old as British history, and even before settled civil life began. They had no need to be either ashamed of their place in the national life nor of their present ability to justify to the full their character as citizens or their life and work in the Empire. (Loud and continued applause.)

Why They Should Join the Guild.

He longed to see the whole body of fair-ground workers on the members' roll of their Guild. He was so strongly convinced of this that he was making a pilgrimage of the British fairs this season to bring the work of their Guild before the whole Showman World. Great trade societies like the Miners' Federation, the Amalgamated Society of Engineers, the cotton workers, and other organised industries, were powerful because of their unity, solidarity, and the vast numbers in their societies. Let them emulate these bodies, and show by the number on their members' list the reality and strength of their organisation. (Cheers.)

Mr. James Monte then asked for new members, or, failing membership, let them subscribe; the secretaries of the meeting were now ready to secure names and subscriptions. After what they had heard, could they for one moment doubt the urgency and the importance of the work that the old society of the vandwellers was doing? (Applause.)

Mr. Horne moved the usual complimentary votes to the proprietors of the show and to the chairman. These were passed with acclamation.

The secretaries, Messrs. Tyler, Smith, and Bassett, then proceeded to enrol the following members, and to register the following subscriptions:—Members, 1907.—A. C. Tyler, 10s. 6d.; S. Doubtfire, 7s. 6d.; T. Frampton, 7s. 6d.; W. Priest, 7s. 6d.; A. Lillingston, 7s. 6d.; C. Jameson, 7s.; W. Turner, 5s.; W. Barker, 5s.; H. Ashington, jun., 5s.; F. Hilton, 5s.; G. Relph, 5s.; W. Howden, 10s. 6d.; John Seed, 5s.

The Guild Service.

In accordance with the Guild's methods of work, the evening meeting was the service of the Guild, and took place in E. Farrar's show pavilion. The proprietors, Messrs. Farrar and Tyler, Mrs. Farrar, and the whole of the working staff, rendered all possible assistance, and the theatre made an excellent chapel of ease to the parish church on the fair-ground, and right well did the show folk avail themselves of it. The booth was lit up by powerful electric arc lamps. The crowded congregation joined most heartily in the service, the singing being led by the choir boys from the parish church and from St. James's Church. The Vicar of Dewsbury (the Rev. R. C. M. Harvey) took the service, and the Guild chaplain preached an impressive sermon on "The Fatherhood of God." The Mayor of Dewsbury (Alderman Parr) was in the congregation, and at the end warmly congratulated the chaplain on the service and wished him God-speed in his work for showpeople.

At the close of the service the principal showpeople were introduced to the Vicar and to Mrs. Harvey. The Vicar has kindly undertaken to act as hon. local chaplain to the Guild.

NEW RAILWAY RATES

FOR SHOW VANS, ROUNDABOUTS, AND FAIR-GROUND CONCERNS.

One of the most signal triumphs for trade combination in the Showman World has been officially announced this week. Early in April this year, at the very beginning of the fair-ground season, showmen, roundabout proprietors, and fair-ground traders found themselves threatened with a proposed new scale of charges for their concerns by the whole of the railway companies.

Enormous Increase.

Contrasted with the rates for the past twenty years and more, the new rates would have meant an all-round increase of 50 per cent. Instructions were issued to traffic managers and stationmasters to charge showmen on this enormously-increased scale, and one roundabout proprietor in the North found himself penalised on one journey of his machines alone to the extent of £50 more. He paid it of course, but under strong protest.

The Protest of the Organised Showmen.

The alarm was sounded in The Era, and the showmen, through their trade societies, took immediate steps to bring their grievances before the combined railways. The combination of the railways was met by the showmen's trade combination. Here we particularly want to emphasise the value of trade defence, and the value of having a strong organisation, with committees of the best experts in the business, always ready to deal with emergencies.

The committee of the Roundabout Proprietors and Showmen's Union contains amongst it best-known and most expert members men who learnt the advantages of trade combination in committee work and in public work for the parent society of all show trade organisations—the United Kingdom Showmen and Van Dwellers' Protection Association, universally known as "The Guild." This schooling in the management of their own affairs, and the necessary handling of public and private meetings, deputation work to great corporations and to high Parliamentary officials gave such showman leaders as Thomas Hurst, George Green, P. Collins, and the younger men like Goldthorpe, Marshall and H. R. Hibbert, the experience to prove their administrative talent and their earnest zeal in good work for their fellow showmen of the Empire. One more point of interest in this relation is the fact that the leading men in both societies are the same, and that on all questions of broad and general interest, and also of general good to the whole showman world, all the societies stand together, speak and act together, for the common good. Yet such is the perversity and the narrow-mindedness of some critics that this work, done for the general good of all alike, has been held up to scorn and reprobation.

What Was Done.

Immediately both the committees of the Union and the Guild set to work. Joint conference led to joint action. Here again we must point a telling truth—that having two societies is of immense value: each with its own sphere of work, yet on all important questions working in harmony. Necessarily the Guild is the best society to deal with Parliamentary or public propaganda work. On the other hand, the society to deal with powerful trading corporations and companies like our railways is the trade union that contains amongst its members the greater number of the customers of the railway in the show business.

The Deputation to the Clearing House.

After correspondence with the secretary to the railway companies at the Clearing House, Euston, it was agreed that a deputation of twelve representative showmen traders and customers of the railways should confer with the traffic managers at the Clearing House on May 9. This was done, and the points at issue, from the showmen's side, were admirably stated by Mr. George Green, president of the Union, and a vice-president of the Guild. Mr. Green's admirable and convincing statement of the show-traders' case is fully set out in detail in the circular of the Union signed by the secretary, and published in full by us in our last issue.

Mr. Green pointed out that the new rates would so cripple the business that it would be impossible to carry it on with such excessive charges. He showed clearly that one roundabout, even if it took a dozen trucks to convey it, should be recognised and carried as one consignment, and that it was practically bad business to attempt any hard and fast rule of equalising weight between truck and truck.

Another telling point in his argument was, that on the old rates the whole business of the fair-ground, as we know it now, had been built up, and that to disturb so large a volume of paying traffic would be not only bad for the show people, but would be bad for the companies.

He showed, to quote his own words, "that we load and unload our own vehicles, only asking you for assistance in strapping and shunting; we prefer to do this, as our men are accustomed to it, and it is a part of their work. We also provide our own tarpaulins, our own levers for moving the vans, and everything necessary to enable us to deal rapidly with the loading and unloading of the traffic. These necessary accessories, including the vans for carrying the roundabouts, represent two-fifths of the total weight carried." This is, we think, a very strong point, and must be unique in the trading world; and, again: "There need be no empty carriages or vehicles hauled, as the exact number are ordered, enabling the companies to provide exactly the number required. There is also the fact that our moving day is usually in the middle of the week, when, we understand, there is not the same demand for carriage trucks.

"This is a creative traffic, and it is questionable if there is any other business that creates such an increase in the number of excursions and passenger traffic. Take Hull Fair, Nottingham Goose Fair, Birmingham Onion Fair, and scores of others. Tens of thousands of excursionists visit these places at fair time, and if there were no fairs there would be no excursions to these places."

Pleasure and Holiday Traffic.

We know, because we have taken pains to get at the facts, that the fairs, feasts, and wakes have created the vast volume of holiday and pleasure traffic that makes so great a factor in the paying revenues of the railways, that instead of Mr. Green's modest estimate of ten of thousands of pleasure excursionists; hundreds and thousands of thousands is nearer the fact; that not only has the fair created the holiday, but that the fair in thousands of centres of busy life to-day is the only safeguard of the people's holidays. Without a fair no holiday is a safe generalisation.

The Old and the New World.

American railways have grasped this great economic truth, and in most cases where fairs are now being created in the American States the railways, as a business move, have carried the shows to the newly-made fair for nothing, realising their profits on the passenger and extra goods traffic the fair and its incidence generates. America, with its State exhibitions, its State fairs its town and street fairs, is endeavouring to create the very business that some of our railway companies and our corporations think a dying industry or negligible quantity. We only point out these facts now in order to fix in the mind of the showman reader the commanding importance of trade defence—and of trade advance. We also wish to congratulate the railway companies upon the way they have treated the showmen.

Also we rejoice that the persistent ventilating of the just demands of this industry of the fair-ground for reasonable treatment, that this paper has consistently maintained, and that the organised showmen have strenuously fought for, has met with a generous recognition at last and a fair amount of success. The new demand of the railway companies would have so crippled the business that, in self-defence, showmen would have sought other means of transit. That has, however, been happily avoided, and the compromise (which was the direct outcome of the conference at the Clearing House on May 9) is embodied in the new scale of charges, which will come into force on Sept. 1.

The New Rates.

This scale of charges is known as "The Scotch Rates for Show Traffic," and it is satisfactory that amongst other advantages it equalises the rate for the United Kingdom, and that it is the extension of the Scotch system to the English lines, and in that sense is not a new rate, but the general application of one already in practical existence. Briefly, it is as follows:—

For show caravans, roundabouts, and fair-ground goods, above 50cwt. By special, passenger, or by goods trains:

1. Above 2 tons 10cwt., and not exceeding 3 tons, 6d. per mile per truck.
2. Above 3 tons, and not exceeding 5 tons, 7d. per truck per mile.
3. Above 5 tons, and not exceeding 7 tons, 8d. per mile.

We sincerely hope that this amicable settlement will be not only satisfactory to the show traders, but that, having been brought into closer business relations, both parties will endeavour to go forward in the fostering of a great industry, that is not only a vast commercial enterprise, but is closely connected with so many other trades and businesses.

Combine! Combine! Combine!

Our final word to every showman is: See the advantages of unity, of combination, and of solidarity, and support the societies that defend you at all points of attack. Let the selfish ones and laggards learn the lesson set out above of the priceless value of unity, and see to it that they speedily recognise their duty, and support their trade societies.

MITCHAM FAIR.

At a meeting of the Parish Council at Mitcham on Thursday last, President, Mr. A. Dendy, resolutions were moved by Mr. Charles Dant, and seconded by Mr. W. M. Bland. The resolutions were as follows:—

"That this meeting of the electors of the Parish of Mitcham, constitutionally assembled, expresses its strong disapproval of the action of Mitcham Parish Council in seeking to bring about the abolition of Mitcham Charter Fair, and desires to record that any attempt to abolish the fair would be contrary to the will of the people."

"That it be an instruction to the Clerk to the Parish Council to forward this resolution to the Home Secretary."

The following resolution was also proposed by Councillor Dant and seconded by Councillor Bland:—

"That this meeting of the electors of the Parish of Mitcham, constitutionally assembled, desires to see the removal of Mitcham Fair from the Fair Green to a more suitable site on Mitcham Common, if the same can be effected without prejudice to the rights granted under the Charter. That it be an instruction to the Clerk to the Parish Council to forward this resolution to the Home Secretary and to the Board of Conservators of Mitcham Common."

Amid loud cheers, the resolution was carried, only four opposing.

The opinion of the electors of Mitcham on the important fair question has thus been obtained without putting the parish to the expense of a poll.

KINEMATOGRAPHY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—Noting the keen interest The Era has taken in the kinematograph world ever since its introduction, I would like to invite discussion in your columns as to the merits of immediate steps to be taken to preserve, by Government aid, the negatives of important films of functions in which his Majesty King Edward is personally interested. In fifty or a hundred years' time these films should prove priceless gems to the British nation.—Yours faithfully,

JOHN FULLER, JUN.
(New Zealand.)

Imperial Hotel, Russell-square, July 25.

The White City, Old Trafford.

This district appears to have been, during the last few days, more favoured by the weather than more southern parts of the country, and this amusement park has had large numbers of visitors. There is always something new, and on the 23rd inst. the annual rose show was held in the large room, and was understood to be even more successful than in former years. The figure eight gravity railway, the great water chute, fun factory, dragon slide, mystic rivers, racing cycles, haunted chamber, the miniature railway, spider's web, air ships, jungle and Bisley rifle ranges, and the numerous games of skill, including that of box ball, are all doing excellent business. One of the chief pleasures is to listen to the music provided this week by the band of the 1st Battalion Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, George Frayling bandmaster.

The Guild at Manchester.

The organising chaplain of the Showmen's Guild will assist the hon. local chaplain (the Rev. H. Norburn), at the Guild Service, at Longsight Wakes, on Sunday (to-morrow), at eight in the evening. The meeting will be held as usual in the Parish Room, close by the fair ground. There will be an afternoon meeting at 3.30 for showpeople only, on the Wakes ground. See advertisement for full particulars.

FILM GOSSIP.

Pathé Frères.

Again we have to congratulate Messrs. Pathé Frères upon a cinematographic production which for ingenuity of conception and daring in execution would be hard to beat. We refer to their latest film, which is entitled "The Aeronaut's First Appearance." A balloonist, evidently a novice, ascends in his ungainly vessel towards the heavens, and apparently is soon in difficulties. He drops his anchor, regardless of the consequences. The huge iron hook smashes into a kiosk, hoists it up in the air, and then lets it fall, shattered, to the ground, to the indignation of the newspaper seller and the gendarmes, who engage in furious pursuit. The balloon continues on its career of destruction; it hauls up human beings, cycles, carts, perambulators, &c., dropping them all to terra firma with disastrous results. Then the powerful cage comes in too violent contact with the roofs of dwelling-houses, scattering chimneys, slates, and bricks helter-skelter, and considerably frightening the astonished inmates, who cling to one another in fear and trembling. This means, of course, a considerable addition to the already large number of pursuers, and the balloonist is finally run to ground near to the gasometer from whence he started. The aeronaut gets rather roughly handled at the close, and is finally left in possession of a wrecked air-vessel and a variety of articles he had himself contrived to damage during his adventurous trip. The film is one that should be in much request.

"The Servant Hypnotist" is another capital Pathé subject. A bachelor announces to his housekeeper that he is about to enter the bonds of holy matrimony, and the servant, fearing that he will lose a very comfortable situation when his master marries, hypnotises him and compels him to indulge in a host of absurd antics at the house of his fiancée when the time comes for the arrangement of the agreement between the respective parents. Of course, everybody thinks he has become insane, and the engagement is broken. Later we witness the uncontrollable joy of the servant who has been responsible for this little contretemps when the bachelor returns to his old rooms.

Charles Urban Trading Co., Ltd.

As usual, this firm is not behindhand in the publication of new and interesting films. They have just issued one, called "Poor, but Honest," a pathetic drama which introduces several charming views of modern Paris. Under a bridge of the Seine several vagrants have spent the night. One, attired in a frock-coat and little else, attracts attention as, haggard and hungry, he visits various high-class restaurants in search of food. A lady, who is accompanied by a little girl, drops her purse, which the vagabond recovers, and is about to hand to its owner, but his action is misinterpreted, and she gives him in charge of the police. At the police station he is accused of the theft, but, after explanations, is set at liberty. Subsequently the lady and her daughter are seen occupying a carriage, the horse attached to which takes fright and bolts. The vagabond succeeds in stopping the horse, but is injured in doing so. He is taken to a surgery and recovers, when the lady recognises the vagrant she had given into custody. She now gratefully presses her purse upon him, which he accepts, but, recognising the donor, he dashes the purse at her feet. Before the Louvre, the poor man receives two sous for opening a cab door. With this he purchases a morsel of bread. Passing the Place du Carousel, he sees a poor child weeping on the steps. She tells him of her hunger, whereupon he divides his piece of bread with her. The series concludes with a beautiful picture of the vagabond making his bed of newspapers on the cobble stones by the side of the Seine.

"The Gipsy's Bride," also a little drama, has just been issued by the Urban Company. The play opens with a charming scene of a gipsy encampment in the heart of a forest. A gipsy, his young bride, and three male companions take their musical instruments and depart for a neighbouring village, where a fair is in progress. After playing and singing, the gipsies pass from table to table collecting the gifts of their audience. A young man becomes enamoured of the gipsy bride, and seizing an opportunity abducts her, and carries her off in a motor-car. The gipsies, following up the clues, arrive at a country mansion whither the girl has been taken. In the grounds they are discovered by the park-keepers, and a fierce fight ensues, in which the keepers are overpowered and bound. The gipsies then effect an entrance into the house. Inside, the abductor is forcing his attentions upon the unwilling girl. The door suddenly flies open, the pursuing party enter, and the girl is released. The spurned suitor is not satisfied. He offers to fight for the girl, and next we see the park lit by flaming torches held by the gipsy band, while two principals engage in a duel. Swords are the weapons used, and pretty play is witnessed before the wealthy suitor is vanquished and the gipsy bears away his bride.

Vitagraph Co.

This firm offers an extremely entertaining film in "The Wrong Flat." In their cosy rooms, Bilkins and his wife are preparing for dinner. The servant brings in the various dishes, and Bilkins starts carving the turkey. His efforts to dismember the bird prove futile, and the girl is called in for an inquisition. Verdict, guilty and discharged. Thoroughly disgusted, Bilkins leaves his apartment. In the flat below Jenkins and his wife are seen discussing the advisability of repapering their rooms. Jenkins leaves to purchase the paper. Upon his return Jenkins, by mistake, enters Bilkins' rooms. He prepares to paper the walls before his wife returns. Paste is spilled over the chairs, carpet, and himself, and later he has an accident with the paste pail. Further complications ensue, but eventually all characters meet in Bilkins' room and explanations ensue.

Ruffell's.

Ruffell's have an operator in Central Africa collecting a series of pictures of the Stanley country. We have no doubt that in due course we shall witness some very instructive and attractive photographs from that region. Ruffell's special projector is giving great satisfaction wherever it is in use, and very steady pictures are obtained by it.

Walturdaw Company.

The Goodwood Cup.—The Walturdaw Company has secured the sole rights to take photographs at the race on Wednesday for the Goodwood Cup. On the same evening the pictures are to be shown at the Palace Theatre. It is expected that the length of the film will be 300 feet.

The Walturdaw's Cinematophone increases its popularity as it increases its age. Among the latest productions in this line are some wonderfully realistic singing-pictures of The Yeomen of the Guard, including "Were I thy bride," "Hereupon we're both agreed," "When a wooer goes a-wooing," and the grand finale of the second act, with solo and chorus. The company has several song-pictures which should find favour with showmen, notably "What d'yer want to talk about it for?" "It's a different girl again," "Riding on top of a car," "Waiting for him to-night," "We all walked into the shop," and "They can't diddle me."

SOLD AT "THE ERA" BUILDINGS, 5, TAVISTOCK-STREET, LONDON, W.C.

LYRIC OPERA HOUSE, HAMMERSMITH.

This theatre was only built twelve years ago. The London County Council now say that they look upon it as an unsafe theatre, and have served notices requiring most extensive alterations—almost amounting to a reconstruction.

As the Lyric Opera House, Hammersmith, Ltd., has only about eighteen months' lease to run,

THE DIRECTORS HAVE DECIDED TO AT ONCE CLOSE THE THEATRE

FOR SALE.

this commodious Hall,

with accommodation in the auditorium for over 2000, and licensed for theatrical performances, together with five shops, offices, and workrooms.

The elevation of the building is of dressed stone, and the whole forms an imposing and attractive block in the very heart of Jarrow, which is the centre of a huge working-class population. The hall, which is heated throughout with hot water, is provided with the usual dressing-rooms at the rear of the stage, and is furnished ready for occupation.

The property is held under a lease for an unexpired term of 76 years at £36 per annum ground rent. Price only £8000. There is at present a mortgage of £5000 upon the building which can remain.

The shops, offices, and workrooms at present let alone produce a nett rental of over £300 per annum, showing a return of nearly 4 per cent. upon the purchase price, without including the rental value of the hall.

This forms an excellent opportunity for theatrical or music hall proprietors to acquire an exceedingly desirable property on most favourable terms.

For further particulars and order to view, apply to THOS. B. SANDERSON and SON, estate agents, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

THE ERA ANNUAL, 1907.
Another book which calls for attention is that excellent and almost indispensable work of reference, "The Era" Almanack and Annual. In this handy shillingsworth one has a complete record of the past dramatic year, and the arrangement is so admirable that no time is lost in finding the desired subject, title of play, revival, or new production, and all that appertains to the drama of the year. The same remark applies to the information concerning the stages of Paris and Berlin; and I should like to see next year the American stage included, because it is becoming so intimately allied with our own, by reason of the production of plays, the interchange of actors, and the comprehensive interests of managers. In addition to the solid pages of facts, there are included short tales and stories by well-known actors and actresses, and altogether the book is one which should find its way into the hands of all genuine lovers of the drama.—Morning Advertiser, Feb. 23, '07.

THE ERA ANNUAL, 1907.
"The Era" Annual for 1907 is out, published from the offices of "The Era," 5, Tavistock-street, W.C. It is the usual complete record of doings in theatreland during the past year, and possesses a live interest in the number of excellent personal contributions by well-known managers, authors, actors, and actresses of the day.—Sportsman, Jan. 22, 1907.

THE ERA ANNUAL, 1907.
That invaluable annual, "The Era" Almanac, has just made its appearance for 1907. In addition to its usual record of the important productions and revivals of the past twelve months in London and Paris, there is a series of bright contributions by Miss Ellen Terry, Mr. Edward German, Mr. Frank Cooper, Mr. Frank Curzon, Mr. Charles Collette, Miss Alma Murray, and other well-known members of the profession.—Sunday Times, Jan. 27.

RE APPLICATIONS FOR ENGAGEMENTS

All applications by either Artists or their Agents must be made to the Head Office.

Lowest terms must be stated, and distinction made between salaries required for larger and smaller towns.

Vacant dates should be stated. If a list of existing bookings be sent, it will render selection easier.

Artists employing Agents should accredit one only at one time, as the friction arising when several Agents are employed at the same time, all expecting the one booking to go through each of them, often renders it expedient to avoid that booking altogether rather than give undeserved offence to several Agents.

New Acts seeking Engagements, or turns not rebooked (possibly because they have played a series of dates without introducing new business), will facilitate matters by having their acts seen by our District Managers. Their Districts and Postal Addresses are as follow:—

EDINBURGH, GLASGOW, NEWCASTLE, AND DISTRICT.
MR. S. GETHING,
Empire Theatre, Glasgow.

LEEDS, SHEFFIELD, HULL, BRADFORD, AND DISTRICT.
MR. T. GERALD MORTON,

MR. WILLIAM COLLINS,

N.B.—Mr. OSWALD STOLL or Mr. FRANK ALLEN can be seen by appointment on all matters arising out of the above, and for the discussion of entirely new Numbers.

All Artists or Agents who communicate with our District Representatives must have made definite applications, in accordance with above directions, to the Head Office, at the same time, or just previously.

THE SERVANT HYPNOTIST.

Another humorous sparkler, full of go; one that holds your audiences. The story is of a young man about to marry; his servants do not like the idea of having a second master, and, what is more, do not intend to have their own plans interfered with, so the butler proceeds to hypnotise his master, and in this way, after many laughable experiments, they succeed in gaining their own ends.

Quality perfect. 460ft. Code Word, "COHUE." The Subject, £7 13s. 4d.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

ABERDEEN.—HIS MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Managing Director, Mr. Robert Arthur; Acting-Manager, Mr. H. Adair Nelson.—The autumn season began with the production of The New Boy, which still proves intensely amusing. Mr. Leon M. Lion gave an exceedingly funny delineation of the title-character, and Mrs. Kennick was impersonated most effectively by Miss Katherine Harrington. Mr. Harry Ashford made an exceptionally good Dr. Candy, and Mr. George De Lara was conspicuously successful as Felix Roach. Mr. Stanley Logan was requisitely vigorous and truculent as Bullock Major; Miss Nellie Kedwood was very charming as Nancy Roach; and Miss Beatrice Manning was delightfully piquante as the maid Susan. The farce is preceded by a clever little piece, Meg the Mobswoman, which is written by Mr. Leon M. Lion.

PALACE THEATRE.—Lessees, The United Company Theatres, Ltd.; Manager, Mr. Walter Gilbert.—Mr. Jack Lorimer's popularity increases with every visit. His talents as a comedian, particularly of the Scottish variety, are of the very highest order. The Creo Brothers are exceptionally clever acrobats; Garlain gives a good ventriloquial turn; Phern and Phern appear with great success in a musical turn; La Belle Rosa is enthusiastically applauded as a solo instrumentalist; Professor Anderson mystifies his audiences with some deft conjuring; Collin and Irene also greatly puzzle the house in their second-sight act; Espinosa and Neilson are expert burlesque dancers; and Joe Mac dances cleverly and pattera humorously. The Bioscope pictures are amusing.

ABERYSTWYTH. — COLISEUM. — On Monday and two following evenings Mr. Frank Ayrton's company occupied the boards with the popular drama, The Power of Gold, when there were crowded audiences. The acting throughout is excellent, especially that of Miss Amy McNeill, in the chief rôle of Lady Brandon.

ALDERSHOT. — HIPPODROME. — Lessee and Manager, Mr. Clarence Sounes; Resident-Manager, Mr. Jack Gladwin.—The sensational sketch, A Club Raid, is realistically played by Mr. Jack Collinson's company; another laughable sketch is Topsy-Turvy School, a screaming absurdity in which a troup of trained children appear, led by Jimmy Green; Eva Hope and company appear in dialogues selected from the works of Charles Dickens; Will Crackles is exceedingly funny; and J. W. Witt gives neat exhibitions of a dance as executed by the various members at a party; Hilda Mascott, a speciality dancer; Syd. McMahon, a tenor vocalist; and the Sisters Brooklands, duettists and dancers, are also here.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE.—THEATRE ROYAL.—Sole Owner and Manager, Mr. Chas. Revill; Acting-Manager, Mr. Wm. Revill.—Valentine Beadon's company is here, with The Best Must Win. The leading male rôle is that of Paul Dumaresq, a lieutenant in the French army, and this part is very ably sustained by Mr. Sydney C. Cranston; Mr. Graham Woods figures prominently by his powerful delineation of "The Panther"; Miss Marie Robson finds plenty of scope for her dramatic ability and skill in the portrayal of the dual rôles of Therese Dumaresq and Lucille La Fanche; Miss Daisy Humphreys also gains applause for her finished portrait of Denise Dumaresq. There are two minor female rôles admirably filled by Misses Dorothy Laine and Madge Palmer. Kirby, Mr. N. A. Overton, and Mr. Fred Owen, who causes considerable amusement as Isaacs, an eccentric Jew.

The pas seul in Act 2 by Miss Violet Hope is executed in a finished and masterly style; Mr. Tom Payne, in his inimitable portrayal of Chambhuddy Ram, from the very commencement fairly captivates all by his comicalities, and his singing and dancing makes him a comedian of no mean repute. Mr. Arthur Gallimore, who imparts wonderful vigour in his songs and dances, capitally maintains his reputation; Miss Alma Priestley also sings and dances with equal success; Mr. G. A. Richins is a no mean exponent of farmyard imitations, and his efforts arouse great hilarity. On Thursday and Friday afternoons Mr. Albert Chevalier and company gave special matinées.

PARIS, Thursday, July 25.—On Tuesday last the little concert-hall in the Conservatoire was filled with the same crowd we see when the competitions are in full swing. There were the fat papas and pompous mammas of the pupils; the latter's friends; the ubiquitous society loafers; actors and actresses; and the poor overworked theatrical critics, who, somehow or other, can never take a holiday. But the before-mentioned papas and mammas did not wear an anxious look like on the days when their darlings have to appear before a critical jury. As to the darlings themselves, they laughed and looked happy. And no wonder, for the ordeal they had to undergo was of a rather pleasant order. They were summoned to receive the prizes awarded to them last week; and these awards did not consist solely in medals, there were also money prizes. "Oui, ma chère!" I heard a buxom lady remark to her neighbour, in true Montmartre slang, "il y aura de la bonne galette!" This "bonne galette" included a sum of £140 to purchase a harp. The lucky recipient was Mlle. Emilie Delgrado-Perez, a splendid young artist, who had secured a first prize. Others received sums varying from £20 to £40. These functions are generally presided over by the Secretary of the Fine Arts Ministry, but M. Dujardin-Beaumetz was unable to attend, and M. Fauré, the director of the Conservatoire, espying M. Camille Saint-Saëns, asked him to take the chair, whereupon M. Saint-Saëns made a wry face. Taking the chair means making a speech, and the veteran composer is not an orator. But he got well out of the difficulty. "My friends," he said, "tell me that I can only be eloquent at the piano. Not being seated at my instrument, I will not attempt the impossible. For all that, I am not sorry to find myself here. I love the Conservatoire, where I have had some excellent pupils, foremost among them M. Gabriel Fauré." M. Fauré smiled, M. Saint-Saëns smiled, the public smiled and applauded, and the pupils cheered. Then came the entertainment. All the prize-winners came forward in their turn, and each sang something, played something, or recited something. And the people in the hall showed their friends all the celebrities, not forgetting, of course, an official—whose name I have forgotten—but who is the man who receives more kisses than any other person in the French Republic. That official is neither young nor handsome, but as he is in the secret of the gods, he knows a quarter of an hour before the official announcement to whom prizes have been awarded; and the least a young lady can do when he whispers to her that she has received an award is to kiss him—and she does it. In fact, it has become a time-honoured custom.

Everybody remembers Auguez, the famous operatic singer, who for many years was a great favourite with the Paris public. A few years before his death he insured his life for £1,000 in the name of his children. As, however, he left many debts, several of his creditors attached the life-policy money, which they said, formed part of the estate. The case was fought out in one of our law courts, and the Court decided against the creditors. "If a man," said the judge, "is heavily in debt, the only way for him to provide for his family is to insure his life. It is even his duty to do so. This decision has given great satisfaction.

"La Maitresse de piano" will be the first novelty at the Sarah Bernhardt's next season. The play, by MM. Félix Duquesnel and André Barde, will be in five acts and six tableaux, preceded by a prologue. The principal rôles will be played by Mlle. Gabrielle Dorziat, and MM. Maurey and André Hall. Possibly, too, Mme. Augustine Leriche will form part of the cast.

The death of M. Mangin has left the post of chef d'orchestre at the Opéra vacant. There were many candidates, but they disappeared one after the other, well knowing that they would have but little chance against MM. A. Catherine and A. Bachelet. Both these gentlemen have for a great many years been directing the chorus. There are never less than three chefs d'orchestre at our Opéra.

Béranger, the lyric poet, died in 1857, having flooded France with his sentimental songs, which were immensely popular. To-day they are too old-fashioned; but the name of Béranger is still reverenced throughout France. It was known that the poet had several times tried his hand at writing a play, but it was supposed that he had torn up these attempts. Not long ago, however, somebody unearthed a one-act comedy by Béranger, called Le Paresseux. The news created a certain amount of sensation, and the MS. having been handed to M. Claretie, it was decided to produce the work at the Comédie-Française. All this was done in the first burst of enthusiasm. When M. Claretie went more carefully into the matter he found that the production would be fraught with difficulties. The piece is interlarded with songs, and although several members of the company have what is commonly called "a voice," it was questionable whether they could be prevailed upon to render, say, "Le Vieil habit," "Le Dieu des bonnes gens," or "Le Grenier." To the great disappointment of Béranger's admirers, M. Claretie has decided to postpone the production of Le Paresseux, and it is more than doubtful whether it will ever take place.

The great novelty at the Nouveautés, this year, will be La Cabotine, a four-act farcical comedy by MM. Tristan Bernard and Athys, wherein MM. Baron fils and Girier will make their début at this house.

On the 31st inst. MM. Hertz and Coquelin withdraw from the Gaîté management, and MM. Isola will take possession of the place. The Gaîté will be transformed into a popular lyric theatre, and on the before-mentioned date it will be handed over to the workmen to make the necessary embellishments.

There will also be several changes of management in the music-hall world. Thus, at La Scala, M. Paul de Fallois has resigned his post, and will be replaced by M. Léon Lecointre. This gentleman promises us several revues, the first from the pen of MM. Léon Nunés and Frabrice Lémon.

The Casino de Paris—as has already been reported—will be turned into a concert hall for symphonic music.

As to the Moulin Rouge, which, during the summer months has been let to MM. Leclerc and Brouette, it will probably pass, in October prox., into the hands of M. Aumont, the ex-manager of the Théatre Aumont, in Moscow.

Mlle. Helene Dutrieu is a talented little actress. She is also young and pretty. But she discovered that it is difficult for a débutante to "make her expenses" on the stage. So she became an acrobat and had a decided success as "The human arrow," and "The winged motor"—this time the young lady could not complain of the salary. For all that, she was not happy. The performances were perilous, and, having nearly met with an accident, she turned her back on acrobatism, and has once more joined the regular stage. She has just signed an engagement with M. Champavert, of the Comédie-Royale, and the terms are, I understand, satisfactory.

M. Paul Clerget, the well-known actor, who, by the way, speaks English like an Englishman, has left for London to engage two English artists for the new work to be produced at the Tréteau-Royal. We tried hard to learn their names, but M. Clerget informed us that it was a great secret, and would prove a pleasant surprise. Nous verrons!

A miserable scoundrel sent a telegram to M. Affre, the popular baritone, informing him that Mme. Affre, enjoying her holidays at Cabourg, had suddenly died. That same evening Mme. Affre received a wire announcing her husband's death. It gave them both a terrible shock, but the fraud was soon discovered, and the authorities are trying to find the perpetrator of this mischievous act.

PARIS, Thursday, Aug. 1.—An interesting case, wherein the cinematograph appears as defendant, will soon be brought into one of our law courts. It is an action brought by the heirs of Gounod, Michel Carré and Jules Barbier, against two cinematographic theatres who are producing the entire opera of Faust. The before-mentioned gentlemen claim heavy damages, and the Authors' Society demands royalties. Thus far the cinematographs have been exempt from any tax beyond a nominal sum for which they secured the rights to give scenes from well-known works. The offending theatres, however, perform Faust in its entirety, and those who bring the action want to prove that, inasmuch as in these performances there is scenery and there are personages, they ought to rank with ordinary playhouses and pay the same royalties. The owners of the cinematographic shows treat the affair as a joke. Our personages, they say, are unreal, and so is our scenery. The whole thing is an optical illusion, and yet Gounod's heirs expect us to pay from 10 to 15 per cent. royalties on these performances! It is absurd, and if the Authors' Society had not interfered no fuss whatever would have been made. But the society is so greedy that it instinctively holds out its hand whenever it thinks there is something to grab.

It is a popular belief that the members of the "profession" do not live long. A few weeks ago, when we carried a poor actress to her last resting-place, someone remarked that she, too, had paid the usual penalty. The lady had died from appendicitis. When Alfred de Musset wrote his famous strophes on Mme. Malibran's death he also pointed out that she was the victim of her art. Actors and actresses know better. They are aware that their calling is not dangerous as far as their health is concerned. The following list—although very incomplete—will confirm this: Derval, the famous actor, was 90 when he died; Mlle. Clairon departed this life at 79; Déjazet at 78; Bouffé at 88; Mme. Dorus-Gras at 91; Mlle. Rose Dupuis at 90; Frédéric Lemaître at 76; Laferrière at 76; Geffroy, of the Comédie-Française, at 91; Lafont at 72; Lhéritier at 76; Hyacinthe, famous for his talent and his long nose, at 73; Chollet, who created Le Postillon de Longjumeau, at 89; Latouche at 81; Lacressonnière at 73; Rénier at 75; Ravel at 76; Mme. Arnould-Plessis at 74; Gilbert Duprez, the celebrated tenor, at 90; Delaunay, at 79; Got at 77; Talbot at 84; and, recently, Mme. Marie Laurent at 78. This short list only comprises celebrities, but there are hundreds of unknown artists who have lived to a very old age, and to their last day enjoyed excellent health.

Two years ago we announced in these columns that the Théâtre des Nouveautés, situated on the Boulevard des Italiens, between the Rue Taitbout and the Rue du Helder, was to be demolished, and that M. Antoine intended to erect on the site a playhouse on a new and approved plan. Events, however, took a different turn. M. Antoine became manager of the Odéon, and the Nouveautés has received a further lease of life of four years. This allows M. Michaud to launch a few more novelties, the first of which will be MM. Tristan Bernard and Alfred Athys' comedy La Cabotine, with MM. Germain, Colombey, and Landrin, and Mmes. Paulette Del Bays and Jenny Rose in the principal rôles. This will be followed by Diz Minutes d'auto, by MM. Georges Berr and Pierre Decourcelle, wherein M. Noblet will impersonate the chief part.

In the theatrical world it has been a matter of surprise that M. Huguenet, one of our best actors, has not been engaged at the Comédie-Française. He was proposed several times, but for some unknown reason the negotiations always came to an abrupt end. To-day I hear that M. Huguenet's engagement is an accomplished fact. He will interpret there Le Secret de Polichinelle, by M. Pierre Wolff, which has had such a successful run at the Gymnase.

The novelties at the Odéon next season will be first, a piece by M. Gustave Geffroy that plays during the Commune, with Mme. Suzanne Desprès in the principal rôle. Next, a comedy by MM. Alexandre Bisson and Berr de Turique. Then Ramuntcho, by M. Pierre Loti; and, finally, Son Père, by M. Albert Guinon.

Mme. Damala, widow, was the prosecutrix in a case of libel against a man called Lacotte, editor of a small periodical called Les Guêpes. The lady thus legally described was no other than Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, who is entitled to our thanks for having come forward and brought her detractor to justice. For some time Mme. Bernhardt, having been reviled in that scurrilous sheet, The Wasps, treated these attacks with the contempt they deserved. In the end, however, she was compelled to take action. The editor was sentenced to a week's imprisonment, with the benefit of the First Offenders Act, to a 50 francs fine, and to pay Mme. Bernhardt 500 francs damages. Had the affair been brought into an English Court that editor would in all probability be picking oakum at the present moment, and continue to do so for a considerable time.

Among the new works to be brought out at the Opéra-Comique next season will be Le Chemineau, by M. Xavier Leroux, and L'Histoire de Tristan, by M. Debussy. The later production has nothing in common with Wagner's work.

M. Henri de Fleurigny is putting the finishing touches to a three-act comedy in blank verse, called Les Deux Langages. It will probably be produced next year at one of our Boulevard theatres.

MM. Louis de Gramont and Jean Thorel have written a libretto taken from Gérard Hauptmann's Hannele Mattern. M. Camille Erlanger has set it to music. Many years ago the play was brought out at Antoine's, but it did not appeal to the Paris public. It, therefore, is more than probable that the musical drama will see the footlights in Germany before it is produced on a Paris stage.

M. Alphonse Franck intends to reopen the Gymnase with Josette, which, after an eight months' run, still drew crowded houses. He then promises us Le Joujou Tragique, by Mlle. Jehanne d'Orliac, a young lady of about twenty. The scene is laid in Venice, and Mlle. Polaire will be one of the attractions in the new piece. M. Franck expects great things from the work that comes next on the list, L'Eventail, by MM. Robert de Flers and Gaston de Caillavet. We will also have Le Mariage de Jacqeline, by M. Paul Gavault, and Le Faux-Pas, by M. André Picard.

THE STRIKE IN BELFAST.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—I should advise all artists visiting Belfast to apply for a permit to the Secretary of the Strike Movement, and inform him when they intend leaving Belfast, either by boat or rail, or else they may have the unpleasant experience of not being able to get their luggage on board. I heard of one case where the artists could not get their stuff on board, and actually could not open on the Monday. I give you the information for what it is worth; only it is better to be on the safe side, for I have been informed that the precaution is absolutely necessary.—Yours faithfully,

AUGUSTE VAN BIENE.

Grand Central Hotel, Belfast,

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught and Prince Arthur of Connaught witnessed the performance of My Wife at the Haymarket Theatre on Saturday evening.

AMUSEMENTS IN AUSTRALIA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

SYDNEY, June 18.—The Colleen Bawn, at the Palace, uses all of Mr. Charles Holloway's capable company in rôles to which they are accustomed to appear, and Mr. J. P. O'Neil is a typical Irishman as Myles-na-Coppaleen, and Miss Beatrice Holloway revels in the loving and ill-used Eileen O'Connor. Mr. J. P. West is an old-time Danny Mann ripened by long experience; and a better Father Tom than that of Mr. J. Hesford has not been seen for years. Mr. Robert Inman as Hardress Cregan and Mr. Godfrey Carr as Kyrle Daly are both sufficient. Miss Alice Deorwyn knows just how to act Sheelah to the life; and Miss Rose Conroy is a youthful Mrs. Cregan. Ann Chute has a very capable representative in Miss Mabel Russell, worthy daughter of clever parents. The scenery is excellent.

"The Spring Chicken," at Her Majesty's, is drawing very big business, and The Squatter's Daughter makes money for Mr. Anderson at the Criterion.

The Tivoli has a great attraction in the Great Carlton, whose legerdmain, performed in black skin tights, is marvellously clever. Miss Eileen Lyons, a young mezzo-soprano from the daughter State of Victoria, and Miss Marorie May, a serio-comic singer from the same State, both created a very favourable impression. All the artists previously noted are still in Mr. Harry Rickards' bill, and the business is good.

Miss Marie Hall, the youthful violinist, brought out by Messrs. J. H. and Nevin Tait, roused great enthusiasm at the Town Hall on the 15th, the vast audience shouting applause and compelling the talented young lady to play the "Traumerei" three times before anyone would leave the hall. Her Excellency Lady Northcote and the Governor remained till all was over. Miss Louie Basche, pianiste, also created a sensation by her fine playing.

Mme. Albani is here again, and with her are associated the English tenor, Mr. William Green, Miss Mildred Jones, contralto, Mr. Haydn Wood, violinist, Miss Myrtle Meggy, the Sydney pianist (just returned), and Mr. Theodore Flint, concert director and accompanist. The first concert, last night, attracted a brilliant audience, both Government Houses—Federal and State—sending large contingents, and the Army and Navy supplied a lot of officers.

SYDNEY, June 25.—The Spring Chicken is drawgood houses delighted with Miss Florence Young, Miss Clara Clifton, Mr. George Lauri, Mr. Reginald Roberts, Mr. W. S. Percy, and every member of Mr. J. C. Williamson's excellent all-round company. Mr. Gerard Coventry has charge of the production, so that the London traditions are faithfully followed.

"The Squatter's Daughter" serves Mr. William Anderson's purpose so well that his Criterion bill will not be changed for some time to come.

Mr. Charles Holloway is finishing his season at the Palace Theatre with a revival of Two Little Vagabonds, in which Miss Beatrice Holloway, as Dick, and Miss Mabel Russell, as Wally, have made enviable reputations. Miss Alice Deerwyn, as Barbara Scarth, and Mr. Robert Inman, as George Thornton, unite with Mr. George Cass, as Captain Darville, in completing an excellent coterie of principals.

The Tivoli added Mr. V. L. Granville, a very clever impersonator, to its list, which now includes "The Great Carlton," Fred Hartley, the juggling schoolboy, Tom Dawson, Leonard Nelson, Graceful Gracie Graham, the Four Rosebuds, Pechow's Cats, and many more of Mr. Harry Rickards' well-chosen artists.

Miss Marie Hall has drawn capital audiences in spite of continuous rain. Her last violin recital, under the direction of Messrs. J. and Nevin Tait, will be given this evening. The young player will long be remembered for rousing such enthusiasm in a city absolutely devoted to musical comedy and other vaudeville entertainments, and Miss Louie Basche, by her solos and accompaniments, has won many admirers.

Mme. Albani came back to us this week in better form and voice even than on her last visit. The evergreen and ever-vivacious favourite of royalty drew all the fashion that we can boast of—Lady Northcote, the Governor, Admiral, General, Judges, and "all who are who." Mr. William Green, recovering from a Melbourne catarrh, proved himself worthy of his reputation, a pure tenor well taught and full of artistic enthusiasm. Miss Mildred Jones, a very fine contralto, sang once at the first concert, on the 17th, when she was taken seriously ill with an internal chill, and now lies in a private hospital. Miss Myrtle Meggy, a Sydney pianist, returned from European study well equipped and warmly welcomed. Mr. Hadyn Wood, violinist, is as good as one wishes to hear, and Mr. Theodore Flint is a revelation of what a conscientious accompanist can do to secure a general success for a concert. He approaches nearer to our Mr. J. Edward Tykes than any other visitor.

"Lady Nora" is the name of a new and original comic opera, composed by Dr. C. W. MacCarthy, of this city, and father of Miss Maud MacCarthy, the clever violinist, now in England. A copyright performance in the shape of an undress rehearsal was given at Her Majesty's Theatre on the afternoon of the 22nd. The lyrics are by Dr. MacCarthy and the dialogue by Mr. Harry Taylor.

West's pictures are turning folk away over and above the capacity of the Lyceum every night. We have also Empire Pictures coming to the Palace, Leslie Harris to the Town Hall, Clay's Vaudeville, the National Amphitheatre with fine vaudeville companies, the Hippodrome with melodrama, the Oxford Theatre with the Thaw Trial, and the American Picturescope at the Victoria Hall. All these are well patronised in spite of the incessant rain.

MELBOURNE, June 25.—Princess Theatre.—Lessee, Mr. J. C. Williamson.—This popular theatre was reopened on Saturday by Mr. Williamson's comedy company in The Blue Moon. Mr. Victor Gonriet acted ably and well; Mr. Gonriet's comedy was capital. Miss Amy Murphy undertook the leading part with satisfactory results; she has a fine fresh voice. Mr. Harold Parkes as Private Charlie Taylor deserves special praise. The mounting was good, and the chorus singing excellent. Mr. Alfred Moulton was an energetic conductor of an efficient orchestra.

Bijou Theatre. — Lessees, Messrs. Sullivan, Harriss, and Wood.—For Her Children's Sake is a great success here.

Opera House.—Proprietor, Mr. Harry Rickards; Business-Manager, Mr. Fred Aydon.—New arrivals here are Messrs. Jarvis and Campbell, eccentric jugglers and hoop manipulators; and Master Joseph Dewhurst, a clever boy soprano. Messrs. Graham and Dent present a new one-act comedy, entitled Packing Up, which evokes much merriment; the Svengali Troupe are as mystifying as ever; Miss Bijou Russell, with her clever dancing and quaint singing has made herself a favourite; and new items are introduced by Mr. Sam La Mert, Miss Fanny Powers, Nellie Kilburn, Fred Black, Harold Reeves, Irving Sayles, Alice Fane, the Two Driscolls, the Gibson Girls, Adrian Amadio, Ruby Tointon, and Jack Willis.

Gaiety Theatre.—Lessee, Mr. Joe Solomons.—The Cinzerellis Brothers and their clever dog Toby introduce a new act; Frank York appears in a farce; and interesting items are contributed by Clara Keating, Walter Melrose, Ruby Chrystal, Fred Ireland, Ada Anderson, and Fred Champion.

STAGE STAFF GOSSIP.

The staff of the Cambridge Theatre, Spennymoor, journeyed by brakes to Barnard Castle on Sunday last. The party was under the guidance of their esteemed manager, Mr. David Collins, who received valuable assistance from Mr. C. Seaton (scenic artist) and Mr. Horton (musical director). This was the first time anything of the sort had been attempted by the Cambridge management, and the treat was greatly relished. A halt was made at the pretty village of Staindrop, which nestles beneath the shadow of the baronial towers of Raby Castle, of which the party had an excellent view from the road on their way. On arrival at Barnard Castle the party were photographed, and subsequently sat down to dinner at the Three Horse Shoes Hotel, where justice was done to an excellent repast.

The usual loyal and patriotic toasts were honoured, after which Mr. David Collins proposed the health of Mr. Hugh Robertson, the proprietor, and success to the theatre, which, on being seconded by Mr. Horton, was received with acclamation. Councillor W. Birchall responded in very eulogistic terms for the guests. All the chief places of interest in and around the ancient town were visited, and an enjoyable time spent. After tea the return journey was commenced, and the drive back through the beautiful country lanes in the gloaming was enjoyed by all.

The stage staff of Wyndham's took their annual outing on Sunday to Burnham-on-Crouch. The morning was devoted to yachting, and then dinner, which was provided at the Old Ship, was done full justice to. Mr. W. Harberd, assistant stage-manager, presided at the table, assisted by Mr. C. Entwistle (master carpenter to J. Welch, Esq.). The success of When Knights Were Bold, coupled with Mr. Welch's name, was drunk with musical honours. The party then went for a drive, and came back to tea, arriving back at Liverpool-street at 9.45.

The annual outing of the staff of the Queen's, Poplar, took place on Sunday, when a party numbering over thirty left Liverpool Street in a special saloon cariage at nine o'clock for Clacton-on-Sea, arriving at their destination shortly before eleven. During the morning sea-bathing and rambles along the cliffs and promenade were indulged in, and punctually at one o'clock everyone sat down to a sumptuous repast at the Brunswick Hotel, under the chairmanship of Mr. Lew Abrahams. After the usual loyal toasts, the health of the proprietors, manager, and staff was proposed by Mr. Edward King, and happily responded to by the chairman.

Mr. Morris Abrahams also very feeling spoke of the good relations existing between the management and the staff, and stated how pleased both he and his brother, Mr. Ben Abrahams, were to be present on these important occasions. The toast of the visitors was proposed by Mr. E. Maynard, and a suitable reply given by Mr. Dickenson, while the health of the chairman was drunk amidst enthusiasm. After dinner the party separated for drives to St. Osyth, Frinton, New Holland, &c., returning to the hotel for tea at 5.30, and leaving Clacton-on-Sea at 8.20, after having spent a delightfully enjoyable day. Congratulations were expressed on all sides at the excellent arrangements made and carried out by the energetic committee (Messrs. E. Garritt, E. Maynard, W. Prince, and C. Chappell), and the onerous duties of secretary were successfully performed by Mr. Fred Brown, jun.

The annual staff outing of the Sheffield Empire Palace staff took place on Sunday last. The party, numbering over fifty, left the Empire at 9 o'clock in eight carriages, accompanied by Mr. Dunbar, their popular manager, for a drive to Monsal Dale, viâ Froggett Edge. After a capital dinner at the Monsal Head Hotel, the party went for a walk through the splendid dale to Ashford-on-Water, where they were met by their carriages for the trip home viâ Baslow, arriving at the Empire at 9.30 after a most enjoyable day.

Mr. H. Hallifax Wells, who succeeded the late Mr. G. A. Payne as managing-director of the Canterbury and Paragon Theatres, presided at the dinner of the combined staffs of those two establishments at their annual outing on Sunday at Clacton-on-Sea. Addressing the festive company at the tables, Mr. Wells said that he could assure everyone present that it had been with the greatest pleasure he found himself able to join them in their outing. Only a few months since nothing had been further from his thoughts than finding himself in his present position. He had been a director of their company for sixteen years, and, of course, in that time had gained some knowledge of the conduct of their houses; but he had never dreamed—lawyer as he was—of becoming their managing-director. But the lamentable loss of their old colleague, Mr. Geo. Adney Payne, led his fellow-directors to ask him to assume the managing-directorship, and, after due consideration, he felt that perhaps it was his duty to do so.

Continuing, Mr. Wells remarked that of late the Canterbury and Paragon had been conducted under great difficulties. They had had the London County Council's requirements to face at a cost of something like £10,000. Then there had been the artists' strike. But now, having met all requirements in those respects, they were hoping to be left in peace, and to be able to resume the earning of at least a small dividend for their shareholders. It should never be forgotten that in theatrical matters it was essentially a case where capital and labour must work together. If capital was not forthcoming to provide and maintain the theatre he need hardly add that artists and a staff would scarcely be necessary. In conclusion, he thanked the staffs for their hearty co-operation and loyalty in respect to their work at both houses, and assured everyone of them that he would ever be ready to consider sympathetically any reasonable request placed before him.

Mr. Fred Miller (general-manager of the Canterbury and Paragon), Mr. Charles Beecham (manager of the Paragon), and Mr. W. S. Wheeler officiated as vice-chairmen, and mine host of the Osborne Hotel placed a very enjoyable repast before his guests. Mr. Harry Harris proposed the toast of "The Directors, Management, and Staffs of the Canterbury and Paragon Halls," and Mr. Fred Miller, in responding, said it was with the greatest pleasure he found the staffs of the two houses joined for the purposes of that day's excursion, for it showed a sense of cordiality and good fellowship between them that was both pleasant and desirable. As they all knew, since their last annual outing they had had the misfortune to lose their old and greatly-respected chief, Mr. Geo. Adney Payne; but of one thing he felt sure—that under the guidance of their esteemed new managing-director, Mr. Wells, whom they were so glad to find with them that day, the Canterbury and Paragon would progress successfully.

Messrs. Charles Beecham and W. S Wheeler, speaking for the Paragon, re-echoed Mr. Miller's sentiments, and Mr. David Cowis spoke similarly on behalf of the Canterbury. Altogether, a very enjoyable day was spent at Clacton, and the whole party of eighty returned to town about half-past ten in the best of spirits. Mr. Fred Miller was accompanied by his daughter, Miss Marie Miller; Mr. Charles Beecham by Mrs. Beecham; and Mr. W. S. Wheeler by Mrs. Wheeler. There were also present Mr. Arthur Grimmet, musical-director at the Paragon; Mr. David Cowis, stage-manager of the Canterbury; and Mr. J. Alexander, stage-manager of the Paragon. Several of the foregoing, together with Messrs. G. Bailey, H. Raphael, H. Lamerton, J. Taylor, and others formed the joint excursion committee. The staffs were joined by a few friends as visitors, among whom were Mr. I. Isaacs and Mr. Harry Harris.

Mr. Albert Bushell, of the Gaiety, Birmingham, conducted a highly successful outing of his staff and friends on Sunday, July 28. The popular general-manager was supported by Mrs. Bushell, who materially assisted her husband in catering for the physical and "spiritual" wants of the party. Among the personal friends present were Mr. and Mrs. Matcham (Empire), Mr. Lester Collingwood (Alexandra Theatre), Mr. Edward Foster (Bordesley Palace), Mr. P. D. Elbourne (Hippodrome), Prof. Hubbard, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Willmott, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Wallis, Mr. Johnson (the Diamond King), and Mr. G. H. Simkins (alias T-rat). A special train conveyed the party of 120 to Worcester, where a comfortable river steamer awaited them. A charming trip down the loveliest part of the Severn brought the pleasure-seekers to the Lower Lode, Tewkesbury.

A sumptuous dinner was served by Host Young. After the toast of the King had been enthusiastically drunk, Mr. Matcham proposed the health of the chairman in a felicitous manner, laying stress upon the friendly relations existing between the various local managers, and the toast was received with musical honours. Mr. Bushell replied in a humorous vein, Mrs. Bushell emphatically declining to accede to the suggestion that she should respond on behalf of her spouse. After dinner the majority witnessed or participated in the Gaiety fishing contest. With such a keen angler at the helm of the Gaiety, it is small wonder that his staff are fishermen to a man, and keen excitement prevailed during the landing of "monster" roach and eels. After partaking of a capital tea, the party re-embarked on the good ship Avonmore Castle, and the return journey to Worcester was enlivened by songs by Little Dando, and music from a capital little orchestra under the direction of Mr. Camp, the Gaiety conductor, and so home after a splendid day.

The staff of the Brighton Hippodrome had their annual outing on Sunday, 28th ult., when they proceeded in wagonettes to Angmering. After seventeen miles' beautiful drive they dined at the Red Lion Hotel, and spent the afternoon in lovely walks in the neighbourhood.

The Southend Empire Theatre staff had its second annual outing on Sunday. Every detail of the arrangements was admirably carried out by Messrs. F. Gaydon and P. Chadwick, steward and treasurer respectively. The company made a pretty punctual start from the Old Ship Hotel, Marine Parade, and travelled by coach to Maldon, by way of Hadleigh, Battlesbridge, and Bicknacre. Mr. Conquest presided at the dinner, after which the loyal toasts were honoured, and in a short speech the chairman expressed his sense of high appreciation of the staff and their work during the year, as well as the ease and smoothness with which affairs went on on both sides of the curtain. Before the enjoyable day came to a conclusion Mr. A. J. H. Prevost, director of the theatre, voiced the acknowledgments of the tourists to Messrs. Gaydon and Chadwick, the former briefly responding.

The Newcastle Empire staff, with their families and friends, to the number of about 120, had their annual outing on Saturday last, when they made Shotley Bridge their rendezvous. The company dined at the Crown and Swords Hotel, Mr. Richard Thornton presiding, then adjourned to the Spa Grounds, where a programme of sports took place. Mr. Thornton presented the prizes to the successful competitors.

AMUSEMENTS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

DURBAN, July 3, 1907.—The theatre here is occupied by the Wheelers' company in The White Chrysanthemum. Miss Mamie Brickwell as Sybil Cunningham captivates all by her charming singing and graceful acting; Mr. Frank Green's fine voice is heard to advantage in the rôle of Lieut. Reginald Armitage; Mr. David Millar makes a great hit as Admiral Sir Horatio Armitage; Mr. Arthur Lacely as Lieut. Chippendale Belmont causes roars of laughter. Merriment is created by Mr. Bert D'Arcy as Sin Chong; Miss Alice Pollard as Cornelia Vanderdecken is chic and dances delightfully; in Miss Lottie Sargent the part of Betty Kenyon has a charming interpreter.

CAPE TOWN, June 26, 1907.—Opera House.—Lessees, Messrs. B. and F. Wheeler; Sub-Lessees and Managers, B. and F. Wheeler, Ltd.; Business-Manager, Mr. A. Wyburd.—After a most successful week with La Belle Marseillaise, Mrs. Brown Potter presented on Monday evening to a crowded and enthusiastic audience Sardou's famous tragedy La Tosca. It is now fifteen years since Mrs. Brown Potter last staged the play in Cape Town in the ill-fated Exhibition Theatre, in which she had the misfortune of being burnt out. Mrs. Brown Potter's Floria Tosca was exceedingly powerful; Mr. A. G. Poulton did well as Baron Scarpia; Miss Price Owen made a handsome and acceptable Queen Maria Carolina; and Mr. C. A. Doran was eminently successful as Mario Cavaradossi. Mr. Esme Stuart was good as Cæsare Angelotti; and Miss Louie Emery and Mr. C. A. Daly played well the small parts of the Princess Capricolla and the Marquess Attavani.

Tivoli Theatre of Varieties.—Lessees, The Empire Theatre, S.A., Ltd.; Managing-Director, Mr. Edgar Hyman; Business-Manager, Mr. A. C. Hyman.—Miss Selma Braatz is a juggler of the first water with billiard balls, top hats, knives, forks, and furniture; she keeps the audience amazed. Another turn which proves decidedly popular is that of Kline and Clifton, in a humorous sketch entitled The Dummy's Holiday. Kelly and Agnes, in their sketch The Tramp and the Soubrette, keep the audience in shrieks of laughter; Miss Violet Grazia, burlesque artist, sings several songs with exceptional merit; Curtis and Vanity, American comedy artists, prove acceptable; Miss Flo Challis, contralto, wins fresh laurels; the Sisters Warner continue to attract with their eccentric dancing and clever songs; the Romanis present a unique musical turn, and are vociferously applauded. A fine set of pictures is shown by the Tivolioscope.

Mr. Alfred Woods and Miss Maude Williamson, supported by an excellent company, are doing big business under the management of Messrs. B. and F. Wheler at His Majesty's Theatre, Johannesburg.

Mark Hambourg, the celebrated pianist, opened at the Wanderers, Johannesburg, on the 30th ult., under the management of Messrs. B. and F. Wheeler. Over 3000 people were present at his first recital.

THE ACTORS' UNION.

Rehearsals were responsible for the unusually small attendance at the weekly meeting of the Actors' Union, which took place at the Bedford Head Hotel on Tuesday. Among those present were Messrs. Fred Bentley, Edwin J. Collins, H. Tripp Edgar, Edward Chester, Frederick Loyd, E. Howard Templeton, Jack Collinson, Edward Mervyn, Arthur St. John, Dare Austin, H. Carlyle Pritchard, E. Y. Rae, Harry Paulton, jun., Cecil Dashwood, J. W. Braithwaite, Grahame Herington, G. A. Seager, Alfred Richards, Francis Chamier, Orlando Barnett, Cecil G. Calvert, Roy Barraclough, Charles G. Norton, J. M. Troughton, Edward Boddy, Edward Sidney, Alfred Tate, and Albert Hayzen, and Misses Louise L'Estrange, Gertrude Tate, Millie Vere, Kitty Marian, Florence Creagh, Nelly Howitt, Mary Bessle, Dot Seilby, Hylda Denison, Winnie Hanley, Marian Bird, Amy Fanchette, and Mabel Selwyn.

Mr. W. Ruddle Brown was voted to the chair, and began by saying that many of their members were rehearsing, and that it looked as if they of the Actors' Union were particularly favoured in the matter of getting engagements. He informed the meeting that at the invitation of Miss Gertrude Kingston a conference of representatives of the Council of the Actors' Association and of the Committee of the Actors' Union was held at 24, Victoria-square, with a view to discovering whether it was possible to take concerted action in matters affecting the dramatic profession. After a lengthy discussion, the aims and objects of the two bodies being evidently identical, it seemed desirable whenever possible that the two societies should afford each other mutual support when dealing with questions affecting the actor's welfare. Mr. Brown added that it was a very good move, and he hoped that they would have one solid body of actors and actresses. He read a letter from Mr. Pete Curran, the M.P. for Jarrow, accepting the position of honorary trustee to the Union. Mr. Brown referred to some corespondence in the Press with regard to ladies on the committee, and said the matter was decided in the negative by a majority of five, which included several ladies. He repudiated the statement by Mr. Cecil Raleigh that there was a sketch artists' clique in the Union. He himself was a sketch artist, but he knew of no clique.

Mr. H. Tripp Edgar took exception to the statement in a contemporary that they did a great deal of talking, but did not seem to do much work. He pointed out that the committeemen put in something like thirty hours a week—an average of five hours a day. Objection was sometimes taken to the name of Actors' Union, as it smacked of the "warkhouse"; but he would remind them that there was the Legal Union, the Church Union, and many others which bore the same description. Had a name ever altered or determined the policy of an organisation? What did it matter so long as their principles were correct? Referring to the statement read by Mr. Brown with regard to the meeting of the representatives of the A.A. and the Actors' Union, Mr. Edgar said the Reform Party of the A.A. were trying to do their best, as they of the Actors' Union were trying to do their best. They were with them, but not of them, and no amalgamation could possibly take place until the Association's house had been set in order. They could not expect the Union to go to them in a sound position while the Association was in an unsound one. He doubted the logic of those who opposed the £2 minimum. The people who now went against the proposal would be better off if the minimum was established, and if it was not their position would be no worse. Was the actor to be the only person who was not to get his price, and was the manager to be the only employer to be exempt from paying for value received? It was only by combination that they would get their true value. It had been stated that an actor had received 27s. 6d. per week and had worked only ten minutes a night in a sketch, which, it was asserted, was at the rate of 10s. per hour. The person who made the statement had evidently never heard of the suggestion that time means money. No credit was given for the time taken up in travelling to the theatre, nothing for waiting between the first and second house and the cost of the necessary refreshments. How did it work out then? Not at 10s. per hour, but exactly 11d. per hour—a trifling discrepancy of 9s. 1d.

Mr. Francis Chamier also dissected Mr. Raleigh's statement that the Union was in the hands of a music hall clique, and demanded to know who was the claque. The mention of the word "strike" had done an incalculable evil. They could not get people to understand that a strike meant that they would have to give up their living and that of their wives and children. If any of them went out on strike, as Mr. Raleigh apparently wished them to do, no sensible businesslike or logical actor or actress could justify it. They would act diplomatically, and keep strikes in the background. If Mr. Raleigh would only throw aside his egoism and help them as he helped the provisional committee he would be welcome; but he was not wanted to organise a reform party in their Union. Let them pay no attention to Mr. Raleigh, but ask him to go there and meet them face to face, and if he could prove his statements they would join him.

Mr. E. J. Collings said the first thing was to get a powerful Union as regards numbers. The Union was formed in March—during the worst time of the year—but they already numbered close upon 500. He hoped before Christmas they would reach close upon a thousand. They were a democratic Union, not governed by any clique or party, and they would kick against anyone who endeavoured to lead them by the nose. They should push the work of the Union forward, their motto being "The greater good for the greater number."

Mr. C. G. Calvert said managers realised that they were working in the best interests of theatrical business, and that they would benefit by the improved performances which were one of the results of the Union's work. They would welcome Mr. Raleigh's help as an individual but a dictator they did not want. He urged them to have patience, and not to be led into instituting reforms which would fail. He hoped those who were going into the provinces would send back good returns. Let them get their numbers up.

Mr. Fred Bentley said he had been trying to do a lot of "spade-work" in the provinces, but he was appalled at the absolute deadness which existed, and people at length began to call it a London Union. The provinces appeared to be very lackadaisical and without the slightest wish to better their condition. As a piece of good news, he added that recently three Union members took part for the first time in a music hall sketch, and at the end of the week the manager came to the dressing-room and, before the rest of the artists, said: "My sketch has never been played as well as it has been this week, and I owe a deep debt of gratitude to the Actors' Union for the three members they sent down, who built up my show." That was one of the best advertisements they could have.

Mr. Arthur St. John also spoke, and the meeting concluded with a vote of thanks to the chair.

Mr. Chamier announced that he was going next week to Manchester, and would endeavour to organise a meeting there.

EDMONTON THEATRE REOPENING.

For months past improvements and alterations have been going on at the Theatre Royal, Edmonton. The theatre has been entirely reconstructed internally. The old gallery has been removed, and a new one, constructed on the cantilever principle of steel and concrete, has taken its place, containing four rows of circle seats, upholstered and provided with backs. At the rear of the circle seven rows of gallery seats are arranged, the whole having a clear and uninterrupted view of the stage. The ground floor is divided into stalls, pit stalls, and pit, and the seating is so arranged that the occupants of every seat can see the performance. There are seven exits from the various parts of the theatre, and all the staircases throughout are of fireproof construction. The doors open out and are fitted with automatic fastenings. The proscenium wall has been rebuilt, thus forming a complete separation between the stage and the auditorium, the small openings in this wall being fitted with iron doors, and the proscenium opening fitted with an asbestos and iron curtain. The dressing-rooms are now placed below the stage, an arrangement which admits of the stage being greatly increased in size, and places the dressing-rooms in a separate and distinct fireproof block with independent exits apart from the stage. The dressing-rooms are well lighted and ventilated and fitted with hat and cloak pegs and dressing-tables. Fire hydrants are fixed on the stage and on each floor in the auditorium, and fire buckets are placed in convenient positions. Large ventilators have been formed over the stage and in the ceiling of the auditorium, and a complete system of ventilation has been installed. Externally the elevation to Angel-road has been heightened, and the whole of the front and side covered with rough cast relieved with red brick and tiles, and the woodwork painted green. Over the main entrance is a new canopy sheltering the principal entrances to the stalls, pit stalls, and pit, which are approached through polished oak doors and leading into a vestibule, the floor of which is paved with mosaic. The whole of the reconstruction has been carried out under the supervision of Messrs. Frank Matcham and Co.

On Thursday the reopening took place, when the Rev. H. E. Bird, vicar of St. John's, Upper Edmonton, addressed the audience from the stage. He said it was a real happiness to him to be present, and give his approval to the drama. They might honour God in their pleasure as well as by worship, if they took their pleasure in the right way. The reverend gentleman's remarks were loudly applauded. The piece announced for performance was A Warning to Women.

"THE A.A. AND THE A.U."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—Mr. Raleigh's adherence to trade unionism has caused him to be ejected through the newest egress of the Actors' Union. Mr. Robson Paige, a supporter of democratic policy, has been anathematised into following his departure. Miss Syringa (Mrs. Paige) has been refused admission because she was "not in sympathy with the rules." Miss Violet Russell, who favoured the original programme, had her membership cancelled. I have been censured by Mr. Chamier for availing myself of the courtesy of the Press to reiterate trade unionism for the Union.

Let members ask themselves the cause of these effects. Is it not that most of us are afraid of trade unionism? We agree that there is something fundamentally awry in the theatrical system, we subscribe laudable sixpences and intentions to set it right, but we pale beneath our grease-paint at the notion of trade unionism. It conjures up visions of grimy persons wrestling with chunks or iron, and we evade the fact that it is the only solution to the problem. I assert emphatically that by no other means in our power can we reach the root of existing evils. Coquetting with half-measures is waste of time, effort, and money. There has always been opposition to trade unionism, which has had to be lived down. Its introduction into the theatrical profession is pioneer work on practically unbroken ground. Are we going to drift indefinitely and leave the inevitable establishment of it to our children, or are we going to pave the way to better conditions for them? Let the Association and the Union put aside all other considerations, and unite on these definite points:—

1. The accumulation of a reserve fund to be utilised, if necessary, to enforce a minimum wage.
2. A committee of actors and actresses with democratic views, to represent artists in licensed theatres.

Will those who favour this suggestion let me have their names? If anyone desires to test the resources of opprobrium in the vocabulary of the opposing section, let him declare himself the founder of the Union Reform Party. If no one bites at this invitation I will endeavour to ascertain them.

I am confident that if a large number of artists who now look askance at both societies could see them united on these points they would say, "Here is something definite. Come on, boys; let us do our little bit towards improving the profession which is our livelihood, and will be the livelihood of those who follow us."—Yours faithfully,

His Majesty's Theatre, Barrow-in-Furness, has during the last three weeks undergone entire reconstruction. The whole of the old interior has been cleared out, the greater portion of the roof raised, the floor dropped, and the gallery and circle reconstructed on the cantilever system. The whole of the house has undergone a transformation, the decoration being carried out in a free Renaissance style, and no pains have been spared to make the theatre one of the handsomest in the country.

At the Darlington Police Court, on Tuesday, John Turner, scenic artist, of Manchester, was summoned by Mr. James Bell, manager of the Darlington Theatre Royal, under the Employers and Workmen Act for damages for breach of agreement. It was stated on behalf of the complainant that the defendant was engaged as scenic artist at £2 10s. a week to paint special scenery for a particular production by a specified date. Suddenly one day, without any warning, he disappeared, and would not come back. The claim was for two weeks' wages, which the plaintiff was entitled to in lieu of notice. The man had also received 10s. 9d. for wages in advance, and the balance of the claim was general damages—in all £10. The Bench made an order against defendant for the payment of £10 and costs.

In the Court of Bankruptcy on Wednesday, an application for discharge was made by Charles Baker Cochrane, theatrical and music-hall agent, of John-street, Adelphi, W.C. It appeared that he commenced business in May, 1900, and that in October, 1902, under the management of himself and another person, two plays were unsuccessfully produced at the Royalty Theatre. The unsecured indebtedness was estimated by the Official Receiver at £1810, and the assets had so far realised £1 6s. 10d. only. His honour suspended the order of discharge for two years.

Dr. Tom Morland .....Mr. T. Laurence Jowitt

This new comedy was accorded a very hearty reception, and the author and Mr. Jerrard Grant Allen, who produced the play, were called at the end. The plot turns on the efforts of a dogmatic old retired Admiral to rule the villagers, clergyman, doctor, &c., who reside on his estate, as if he were aboard his own ship, and the result is naturally rank mutiny. He annoys the villagers by closing the Lord Nelson Inn, then further enrages them by ordering their attendance at church every Sunday. He allots his daughter Vivien in marriage to a cynical squire, Sir James Newburgh, in spite of the fact that her affections are already given to Dr. Tom Morland; and when he finds himself opposed in every direction he orders out of their respective houses the doctor, the clergyman, and even his stepdaughter, Frances Weir, the "stormy petrel" of the story, so named by the Admiral, as her advent always coincides with a domestic storm—not unnaturally, seeing that she is a young woman of strong and independent views, and opposes the Admiral's crack-brained schemes at every turn. The eviction gives opportunity for a very picturesque third act, where those who have been turned out are seen camping on the village common, in tents and a living caravan, and here they remain until the Admiral capitulates and withdraws his autocratic demands.

The story is well told in clever dialogue without any straining after effect, and the various characters are skilfully defined. The fiery old sea-dog, though a familiar stage type, was represented with many clever and original touches by Mr. Leon M. Lion. As Frances Weir, the stormy petrel, Miss Katherine Harrington was particularly well placed, and the audience were most hearty in their appreciation of her efforts. Her stormy scenes with the Admiral and her wordy duels with Sir James Newburgh were excellently done. From her early-expressed determination to prevent the marriage of her step-sister, Vivien, with Sir James she carries on a clever war of wits with that gentleman, until he finally induces her to marry him herself, and so make her sister's love affairs easy of solution. As Sir James Newburgh Mr. Jerrold Robertshaw was particularly good, and his easy, confident, and masterful style and cynical good humour made the part one of the successes of the evening. For the younger pair of lovers Mr. T. Laurence Jowitt (a Glasgow amateur of much promise) as Dr. Tom Morland made a good impression; and his sweetheart, Vivien, was played by Miss Nina Sevening, who on this occasion made her first essay out of musical comedy. The part is not a heavy one, and Miss Sevening acted it with grace and charm. As the outspoken clergyman Mr. Stanley Logan was good, and Mr. William J. Rea ably played the rôle of Dr. Stevens, their respective "scenes" with the Admiral being first-rate. Mr. Harry Ashford gives a touch of rich humour to the old gardener Jacob Bastock, and also ably doubled the part of the bucolic villager with a grievance. Mr. George de Lara as the Admiral's servant and Miss Nell Douglas as Louie had some amusing comedy scenes; and Mr. A. Corneille and Mr. A. Scott as villagers completed a good cast. The author of the play, Dr. Hall, formerly of Wigan and now resident near London, has written for the stage before, a clever one-act play of his (in conjunction with Mr. Leon M. Lion) having been in the King's bill this week. The new play is his first long contribution, and his future efforts will be followed with interest. The first two acts of the play take place in the Admiral's garden, a cleverly-set scene, but the admiration of the audience was heartiest for the clever camping-out setting of the third act. At the fall of the curtain calls of author brought forward Mr. Jerrard Grant Allen, who thanked the audience in a few words and introduced the author, who contented himself with bowing his acknowledgments. The play was produced by Mr. Leon M. Lion for Mr. Allen, and the stage-management was ably looked after by Mr. George de Lara.

THE CAMDEN.

On Monday, July 29th, the Drama, entitled
"A WOMAN'S PLUCK."

The engagement of Mr. James Willard's company in his own drama, A Woman's Pluck, is a decidedly good one. This play loses nothing by repetition, for it is unique in its style. As Grace Daremont, the lady who is so handy with the gloves, Miss Marion Fawcett gives a very forcible piece of acting, and plays with great spirit. Mr. Austin Mortimer plays the rascally Dick Darrell with a very sure hand, and one is almost compelled to feel a certain admiration for a scoundrel who, bad as he is, keeps the game going steadily and when beaten in one way embarks on another. Mr. Harry Emmerson is very good as the old blind basket-maker, Matthew Pope; while Mrs. Pope is played in a very quiet manner by Miss Elsie Mailland. The Popes' adopted daughter is very sweetly and prettily played by Miss Dolly Gilroy, who makes quite a charming young heroine; while her artist lover, Winston Dale, is portrayed in a most fresh and manly fashion by Mr. Matthew Boulton. Mr. J. P. Dryden appears in the dual rôle of Mark Scanlon, and afterwards as Ian Daremont, with marked success. Mr. Dicky Bird and Miss Fanny James are most amusing as the showman and his wife, and cause many laughs during the play. Mr. Arthur Temple is good as Sir Noel Fordyce; and Mr. Herbert Claremont is excellent as the old sportsman, Sir John Daredevil. Miss Kitty Johnstone is very smart as Sir John's mischievous grandson Bertie; Mr. Higham Twyson makes a decidedly acceptable Rev. John Raymond. Among the other characters we would mention the Lady Daredevil of Miss Nora Kingsley and Miss Daisy Dale as Lotty Maynard; while the remainder are very well played. The play is capitally mounted, and replete in every detail down to a motor-car. Mr. Harry Emmerson looks to the stage and also business-management for Mr. James Willard.

Mr. Herbert Jay's Concert Party, the Masqueraders, is proving a big draw at Felixstowe. Mr. J. Wellesley Lynn, the well-known entertainer, owing to his great success, was retained another week, his two sketches, Art v. Heart and The Limerick Bride, were real hits. In the latter, Mr. Robert Selby scored first honours. Mrs. Lynn is shortly producing a most thrilling and dramatic incident from the pen of her husband, which will be the most sensational thing of its kind ever seen on any stage. Special scenery has been painted by Mr. H. G. Wallis, electrical effects by Hellyar and Co., mechanical effects by Messrs. Dexter and Snow.

Mr. Harry Hunter, the popular manager of the New Theatre Royal, Leamington, has been transferred to the managership of Mr. Milton Bode's County Theatre, Reading.

NEW SPA THEATRE, BRIDLINGTON.

On Monday evening Mrs. Beerbohm Tree opened the above theatre, which the Spa Company have erected to take the place of the building which was destroyed by fire last autumn. A large and fashionable audience had assembled when the chairman of the directors, Mr. M. Whitaker, came on the stage, accompanied by His Worship the Mayor of Bridlington (Alderman Sanedon), Mr. W. S. Walker (the architect), Mr. Henry Hague (secretary and manager of the Spa), and Mrs. Tree, who had as companion Miss Agnes Nicholls. Mr. Whitaker gave a brief introductory address, and was followed by the Mayor, who expressed the obligation the town was under to Messrs. Whitaker Bros. for their enterprise in beautifying and adding to the attractions of Bridlington, and also complimented the architect upon the beautiful building he had designed. He hoped that the audience assembled that night was a good augury for the success of the new enterprise.

Mr. Walker expressed his thanks for the compliments paid him. If he had not been well backed up by the directors and their highly-efficient manager, Mr. Hague, he would not have been able to provide such a handsome building.

Mrs. Beerbohm Tree, who was received with the utmost enthusiasm, said: Mr. Mayor, ladies, and gentlemen,—Accustomed as I am to public speaking, I am not accustomed to make a speech, and, like the Irishman, when I start to speak I'm dumb. (Laughter.) But it would be unpardonable of me if I did not say something on this auspicious occasion. I heartily congratulate Bridlington on the splendid theatre which has been erected in its midst, and which is entirely due to the pluck and enterprise of Messrs. Whitaker Bros. Having examined the theatre, I must express my profound admiration for the beautiful building, the commodious stage, perfect "line of sight," and, more important still, its well-arranged exits and entrances—so necessary for the peace of mind and safety of those who in the future will visit it. I know that last year had been adverse, owing to the unfortunate and mysterious destruction of the old theatre by fire, the cause of which "Mr. Sherlock Holmes" in the person of Mr. Hague—(laughter)—was trying to elucidate. Thanks to the energy of Messrs. Whitaker, it had seemed, like the fabled Phœnix, to rise from its own ashes, but it had risen a still finer bird, with brighter plumage, capable of higher flights, and I hope it will be a source of blessing and of pleasure to those who use it. I have noticed the development of the south side, which a very few years ago consisted largely of waste land, but which is now a valuable asset to the Corporation of Bridlington. Speaking for myself, I am exceedingly grateful for the new theatre; a building so perfectly suitable for the highest productions cannot but add to the dignity and honour of my profession. I have received a letter of congratulation from Mr. Tree, expressing the hope that he may one day bring His Majesty's Theatre company to the new theatre. I wish it every success and prosperity in the future. I do not know whether she who performs the ceremony of opening a theatre should be called its godmother; if so, I should like to be called its fairy godmother, so that I may launch it with every blessing. Mr. Hague might then be Oberon and myself Titania. In conclusion, Mrs. Tree quoted the last passage of A Midsummer Night's Dream, and on reaching the words "Hand in hand with fairy grace" she caused loud laughter and applause by extending her hand to Mr. Hague and asking the audience if they saw the "fairy grace," a joke which was quickly seen by the audience; and she then wound up by repeating the couplet, "Hand in hand with fairy grace will we sing and bless this place."

Miss Cissy Whitaker, daughter of the chairman of directors, then presented Mrs. Tree with a massive and handsome bouquet, and the same compliment was paid to Miss Nicholls by Mr. Hague. The curtain was then raised, revealing the handsome stage, on which was charmingly grouped the members of Mr. Charles Macdona's The Girl from Kay's company, who are engaged for the first week of the new venture. The orchestra, under the baton of Mr. W. H. Eveleigh, struck up the first notes of "God Save the King," and Miss Agnes Nicholls sang the first verse as a solo, after which the whole audience took up the air and gave it with an effect which tested the capabilities of the new theatre for carrying a volume of sound. The curtain was then rung down, and on it being again raised, Mrs. Tree came forward and recited "Lorraine, Lorraine, Loree" and "Young Lochinvar." The applause was so prolonged that she again appeared, and gave an amusing little sketch.

Mr. Hague has received letters and telegrams expressing good wishes for the success of the new theatre from a large number of brother managers and eminent actors, including Mr. Martin Harvey, Mr. Cyril Maude, Mr. Edward Compton, and Mr. Charles Macdona.

The theatre has been built to the design of Mr. W. S. Walker, F.R.I.B.A., of the firm of Messrs. Brodrick, Lowther, and Walker, architects, Hull, and will hold about 1,400 persons. It is designed in the Italian Renaissance style of architecture, simply and broadly treated, a dignified and imposing effect being obtained without an undue use of ornament or decoration, and it undoubtedly reflects the greatest credit on its designer, under whose supervision the whole of the work has been expeditiously carried out, Mr. W. Spink and Messrs. Sampson and Siddall, the building contractors, having carried out their work with every satisfaction. The theatre is divided into stalls, pit, grand circle, and upper circle, is most handsomely appointed, and is illuminated throughout by electricity, the contract for which was placed with the well-known firm of Messrs. A. C. Dickins and Co., of Northampton, who have carried out their work most effectively. The theatre will afford the residents and visitors an opportunity of witnessing first-class dramatic productions, musical comedy, &c., under the most perfect and comfortable conditions as regards a "perfect line of sight," and seating accommodation far superior to anything hitherto seen in Bridlington.

The stage is a very commodious one, and capable of accommodating the largest theatrical production travelling, whilst ample dressing-room accommodation is afforded for the largest and best of companies. The stage dimensions are:—Opening, 30ft. wide by 35ft. deep; 27ft. high; total width, 55ft. 6in.; height under fly galleries 23ft.; 34ft. to grid.

"STRATHMORE" ON THE STAGE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—In your "Answers to Correspondents" I note an inquiry re Ouida's "Strathmore." I purchased a dramatic version of the novel, called Wrath, in 1881, and it was produced at the Theatre Royal, Huddersfield, in 1882, with Miss Amy Steinberg and Edward Sass in the leading parts, and afterwards played at the Standard Theatre under my management. The drama was written by C. H. Stephenson (the original Father Tom in Colleen Bawn).—Yours faithfully, JOHN DOUGLASS.

July 31.

Mr. Acton Bond has been specially engaged to play Clancarty with Mrs. Russ Whytal on her forthcoming tour of the principal cities, commencing at the Theatre Royal, Newcastle, on Monday.

ROYAL OPERA SEASON.

With the performance of La Bohème, honoured by the presence of Her Majesty the Queen, Princess Victoria, the Duke of Connaught, and Prince Francis of Teck, the Grand Opera Season at Covent Garden for 1907 ended. Although the past season, one of the longest on record, has not been eventful in the production of new works, Catalani's Loreley being the only absolute novelty, it has been remarkable for the number of fine performances given of the older operas and the magnificent mounting and brilliant representation of operas that have not been heard for years, such as Ponchielli's La Gioconda and Giordano's Fédora. The new opera Loreley achieved only a moderate success, but so beautiful was the scenery and superb the acting and singing in La Gioconda that it aroused considerable interest. An excellent performance of Andrea Chénier, produced late in the season, was also given. In May two complete cycles of Der Ring des Nibelungen were given with the greatest success under the direction of Dr. Hans Richter, who also conducted Lohengrin, Der Fliegende Holländer, Tannhäuser, and Die Meistersinger. An important feature in the first cycle was the successful appearance of six English singers—Mesdames Kirkby Lunn, Agnes Nicholls, Edna Thornton, Gleeson White, Gertrude Lonsdale, and Maud Santley, and the American artist, Mr. C. Whitehill, an excellent exponent of the part of Wotan. Die Meistersinger was given three times, Tannhäuser three, Der Fliegende Holländer three, and Lohengrin two. But Puccini's La Bohème was given eight times, Madama Butterfly seven, and Tosca four times; Traviata was sung on five occasions; Cavalleria Rusticana, Rigoletto, and Pagliacci four each; three excellent performances were given of Hänsel und Gretel and three of Mozart's early opera Bastien and Bastienne; Carmen, Aïda, Lucia, Il Ballo in Maschera, Andrea Chénier, Loreley, and The Merry Wives of Windsor were performed twice each; while only one performance was given of Faust. In the list of artists who appeared during the season Mme. Melba, through indisposition, was unable to sing so often as her host of devotees could have wished; but Signor Caruso, fortunately in excellent health, has not spared his magnificent voice in the cause of art, and his triumphs this season have been conspicuous. Mlle. Destinn also has greatly advanced her position by her successes in Aïda, Madama Butterfly, Der Fliegende Holländer, and Pagliacci; and the welcome reappearance of Fräulein Selma Kurz was accentuated by her brilliant singing in Lucia and Il Ballo in Maschera. Mme. Donalda, Mlle. Scalar, and Mme. Giachetti have each increased their already great reputations; while Mme. Kirkby Lunn has sung admirably. A newcomer, Signor Bassi, sang with marked success, and Signor Bonci's return to Covent Garden was very welcome. Other artists who have greatly strengthened the company are Signor Scotti, Signor Sammarco, M. Gilibert, M. Journet, Signor Scandiani, M. Marcoux, and Signor Zucchi. The artists who successfully appeared in the Ring performances were Frau Gulbranson, Frau Fleischer-Edel, Frau Knüpfer-Egli, Herr Kraus, Herr Jörn, Herr Van Rooy, and Herr Zador. The conductors were Dr. Richter, Signor Campanini, Mr. Percy Pitt, and Signor Panizza, and the scenic artists, stage-manager, chorus, and orchestra deserve special mention.

Mr. Frank Rendle, with Mr. Neil Forsyth manager and Mr. Percy Pitt musical director, announces that the Grand Opera Syndicate will on Oct. 3 give an eight weeks season at Covent Garden. With the exception of Mme. Melba, most of the famous artists, including Signor Caruso, will be engaged for the autumn season, and it is the desire of the syndicate that British instrumentalists shall be engaged for the orchestra. Signor Panizza and Signor Serafin will be the conductors, and the prices of admission will be about half those charged during the Grand Season.

"BROTHER BILL."

A Farcical Domestic Comedy Sketch, in One Act, by J. Fred Watson, Produced at the Victoria Theatre, Broughton, on Monday, July 29.

Dickory Dock .....Mr. Edwin Garth
Cackles .....Mr. Hardy Macro
Telegraph Boy .....By Himself
Mrs. Dickory Dock .....Miss Pattie Hastings

The scene opens in the kitchen of the house of a mechanic, Dickory Dock, who appears to be very fond of parting with a good proportion of his wages at the Green Dragon public-house, and his wife is discovered preparing a meal for him and soliloquising on his lateness in getting home. A stuttering village postman comes in with a bundle of letters, and, after going through several addresses, finds he has none to leave. She runs him out, and he returns with one for the husband, which he proposes to take to the Green Dragon and deliver it to Dickory, who he says is there. Mrs. Dickory Dock snatches the letter from him, and finds that it is from her husband's brother, Bill, who had not been heard of for a considerable time, and who had become rich. He states that he is coming to see them, and if he finds them living happily he will start them in a small shop with £100, but if he finds he cannot come he will telegraph them. The husband arrives, and, after being upbraided for his delay, is shown the letter. He hands over to his wife some money, and they agree to give Brother Bill a fitting reception. While the wife is out shopping the husband makes all sorts of mistakes, and ruins the cooking. She returns, and soon after she discovers the hopeless state of the proposed dinner a telegram arrives from Brother Bill saying that he finds he is unable to come, but the £100 will be sent.

Mr. Edwin Garth as Dickory Dock keeps the house in roars; and a most comical stammering, gossiping postman is presented by Mr. Hardy Macro. Miss Pattie Hastings cleverly sustains the part of the wife.

COUNTY THEATRE, KINGSTON.

On Monday, July 29, the Eccentric Comedy, in Three Acts, by W. Kingsley Tarpey, entitled
"THE AMATEUR SOCIALIST."

There was a fairly good audience at the Kingston Theatre on Monday night, when the doors were re-opened, after having been closed for a fortnight for cleaning and redecoration, for the production of the above play from the Criterion. It was the first of a number of successful bookings of first-class plays which Mr. Peter Davey, the enterprising managing-director, has arranged. The play was well received. Mr. George Mudie, an old Kingston favourite, sustains the title-rôle as Sir Hubert Pennefeather, Bart., and the part of the eccentric autocrat loses none of its attractiveness in his hands. Mr. E. Y. Rae also appears with success in his original part of Sergeant Fell. Miss Marie Hudspeth appears as Lady Pennefeather and Miss Edith Deverell as Evelyn Rivers, and both acquit themselves with distinction. Valuable assistance is also given by Mr. Bruno Holmes as Inspector Bott, Mr. J. W. Deverell as Spencer Pennefeather, Mr. Percy Carlton as the Hon. Phillip Wykeham, Miss Gladys Marris as Cora Moberley, Mr. Jas. Martin as Mr. Moberley, and Miss Ada Gordon as Lady Mabel Wrothesley. Following the comedy, which was admirably mounted, was presented a series of living pictures by the Jeapes's Animated Graphic Co., including pictures of Kingston Regatta.

Two specialities from the Parisiana Theatre, Paris, have been obtained for the revival of old-fashioned pantomime to be presented at Christmas by Mr. Maundy-Gregory. The revival of a real old pantomime with its ballet, transformations, and harlequinade complete will no doubt be heartily welcomed.

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

Mr. and Mrs. Kendal have become patrons of the local golf club at Filey, where their charming marine residence is situated, and have presented a silver cup for competition. The cup was won for the first time this week, and at the subsequent ceremony Mr. Kendal said he regarded the game as an admirable one, as it exercised the brain and muscle and promoted good-fellowship. Mrs. Kendal, who made the presentation, admitted that she knew nothing about golf personally, but she understood that it was a game which was highly commended by excellent mothers, who claimed that it made their daughters so tired that when they got home they went straight to bed.

Mr. Beerbohm Tree, after a more than usually arduous season, is taking holiday at Marienbad, to which salubrious spot Mr. Charles Hawtrey Lowenfeld and Mr. Richard Warner, the well-known variety agent, are also resorting. Mr. George Alexander will find relief from all-night sittings of the County Council in a tour of Switzerland and France, and Mr. Lewis Waller will revel in the excitements of a motor run in the latter country. Miss Marie Tempest has chosen for her vacation the favourite town of Dieppe, from which Miss Constance Collier has just returned.

Mr. Edward Terry's annual provincial tour will commence on Monday at the Grand Pavilion Theatre, Bridlington. His répertoire includes Liberty Hall, The Magistrate, Sweet Lavender, The Passport, and many of his well-known successes. The company supporting Mr. Terry will comprise Misses Marian Ripley, Evelyn Ormonde, Ruth Nightingale, Agnes Knights, Eugénie Vernie, and Ella Dixon, and Messrs. Thomas Holding, Percy Crawford, B. A. Pittar, Charles B. Bedells, William Dexter, and George Byrne. Mr. H. A. Samson will be the stage-manager, Mr. Percy Barrow the advance representative, and the business-manager Mr. A. Græme.

The ordinary general meeting of the shareholders of the Gaiety Theatre, Ltd., will be held at the theatre on Wednesday, at noon. In their report the directors state that the gross profit for the year amounts to £8,519 15s. 11d., which, with the sum brought forward from 1906, viz., £1,102 2s. 8d., makes a total of £9,621 18s. 7d. to be dealt with. They regret that the play The New Aladdin resulted in a heavy loss, and that it was also necessary to close the theatre during the months of July, August and September, but they congratulate the shareholders on the very successful production, The Girls of Gottenberg. In view of the adverse conditions, they have decided not to recommend a dividend for the year under consideration, but to utilise £7,240 17s. 10d. of the £9,621 18s. 7d. referred to in writing down the asset "stage properties," and also to apply the "reserve" account, £12,017 4s. 2d., for the same purpose, carrying forward the balance of £2,381 0s. 9d. to the credit of next account. Mr. George Edwardes is the retiring director, but is eligible, and offers himself, for re-election.

The statement that Mr. George Alexander and Mr. E. H. Sothern were to play together in each other's companies has been denied by the latter gentleman, who has sent to the New York papers a letter which says that the rumour was perhaps the outcome of some idle conversation, but had no foundation in fact. "Mr. Alexander," writes Mr. Sothern, "has been caused considerable annoyance by the publication, and has written to me to ask me to deny that any such arrangement was suggested by him. It has recently been repeated that I was approached on this matter while in London. Mr. Alexander did not approach me, nor did I approach him, and I deeply regret that he has been caused any annoyance."

Mr. Charles Manners, whose series of operas in English is such a welcome feature of the present season in London, recently paid a visit to the Paris Opera Comique, where Madama Butterfly was being played, in order to pick up as many hints as possible for his forthcoming production of the work at the Lyric. By combining the knowledge thus acquired with that which his visits to Covent Garden have afforded him, together with the exercise of his own experience and enterprise, Mr. Manners may be trusted to achieve something which his patrons will greatly appreciate.

Miss Olga Nethersole, during her last tour of the United States, interested herself in the Juvenile Courts of America, and collected official reports of the work done. Before leaving London for Scotland, the popular actress was received at the Mansion House by the Lord Mayor, to whom she submitted the results of her inquiries, which are so favourable that she has high hopes of seeing the same methods adopted in Great Britain.

The late Miss Maria Daly appointed Mr. Chas. J. Davies, the secretary of the Royal General Theatrical Fund, the executor to her will. Miss Daly and her mother had been the recipients of great benefits from the Royal General Theatrical Fund, and to mark her gratitude Miss Daly has, by her will, enriched the fund to the extent of £700. Miss Daly expressed the hope that beneficiaires of the fund would copy her example and leave bequests to the fund whenever possible. Mr. Davies, as executor of the will, has handed over to Mr. Terry, the treasurer of the fund, the amount realised from Miss Daly's estate.

Mr. Cyril Maude will himself take the part of Peter in his forthcoming production of Gaston Mayer's version of L'Anglais tel qu'on Parle, which is to be called French as He is Spoke. Mr. George Shelton, for whom the part was originally designed, has unfortunately fallen a victim to a nervous breakdown, and has been obliged to relinquish the rôle. The little piece, which will be put in front of The Earl of Pawtucket at the Playhouse towards the end of next week, will be further sustained by Messrs. D. J. McCarthy, Ernest Mainwaring, John Harwood, A. G. Onslow, and W. Blair, and Miss Madge Titheradge and Miss Kate Harwood. Mr. Shelton is also out of the cast of The Earl of Pawtucket, and his part of Silas Hooper is being played by Mr. Dore Davison, that of Crennan falling to Mr. Charles Hampden.

Mr. Martin Harvey has followed up his enterprise in commissioning Mr. Stephen Phillips to make a new adaptation of Scott's "Bride of Lammermoor" with an equally interesting design, and has induced Mr. W. L. Courtney to utilise his graceful pen in the preparation of a play embodying the pith of the two dramas of Sophocles, Œdipus Rex and Œdipus Coloneus, an English version of which, it would seem, has not been seen in England for upwards of 200 years. No attempt will be made to reproduce the characteristic features appertaining to the drama of ancient Greece, but every opportunity for scenic display will be taken in the setting of the work.

The last performance of Divorçons at the Duke of York's Theatre was received with much applause by a full house, and the enthusiastic reception given to Miss Grace George at the fall of the curtain clearly expressed how much London desires to see more of her art. Miss George was presented with a large wreath of laurels. She sailed for New York on Thursday by the White Star liner Cedric, by which vessel the company also travelled.

Mr. Charles Manners has determined to extend to London the scheme he recently started in the provinces, by which the services of local operatic societies are employed to enhance the performance of various works. Accordingly during the week commencing August 12th, the Moody-Manners Opera Company, now performing at the Lyric, will be augmented by sixty members of the Sheffield Opera Society, who will swell the chorus in Tannhäuser, Lohengrin, Aida, and Faust. Mr. Manners suggests that a similar society might be started in London, and offers to lend, free, two or three of his best principals and a stage manager, so that the promoters would be relieved of any excessive outlay.

Mr. Hall Caine's new version of The Christian, with which Mr. Wentworth Croke opens his season at the Lyceum Theatre, in conjunction with Messrs. Henry R. Smith and Ernest Carpenter, will be produced on Saturday evening, Aug. 31. Mr. Ernest Carpenter will be the producer. Mr. Henry W. Garrick, formerly of the London Hippodrome, has been appointed Press representative at the Lyceum for the run of The Christian.

"The Sins of Society" is to be the title of the autumn drama at Drury Lane, rehearsals for which begin next week. The authors, Messrs. Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton, have taken up the question of "bridge" and its influence upon fashionable society, but the action of the play is not confined to London. The second act is laid outside Windsor Castle, and includes realistic river scenes, while one of the most impressive incidents takes place on the racecourse at Longchamps, for which a dramatic episode is reserved. The majority of the cast, in which Miss Constance Collier, Miss Fanny Brough, and Mr. Albert Chevalier figure, have already been given in this coloumn.

A very interesting discovery has been made among a collection of old pictures in a historic house in Marylebone. It is a water-colour painting of Edmund Kean in the character of Richard III., and is signed "M. Myers." It is on stiff card, now yellow with age, and on the back in firm, distinct, well-preserved handwriting is the inscription: "February 28, 1815. Kean in the character of Richard III." The portrait itself is strong and carefully executed, the facial expression being thoughtful and determined. Black hair in ringlets falls on the shoulders, the brow is broad and massive, eyebrows have a frown and with indications of deep mental working, while the nose is long and strongly marked. The eyes are keen and penetrating, retreating under the brow—a sure sign of an active mind, thoughtful mood, or intellectual aptitude. The mouth is full, rather broad, shut, and the lower lip being ample and protuberant, would indicate, according to Lavater's teaching, the generous and impulsive disposition that the famous Shakespearean possessed. Rich ermine surrounds the head, surmounted by the crown, which has three frontal enrichments. Shoulders and bust are merely sketched in. The portrait will be offered for sale, and, no doubt, some collector of dramatic curios will be glad to secure it.

Some magnificent modern ladies' costumes are seen in The Eighteenth Century, at the St. James's, Mr. Edward Compton having secured the services of Mme. Pacard, of 16, Brook-street, W., to design and make them. Miss Grace Lane, who takes the principal part of the heiress, wears a white striped satin Ninon evening dress, with upright band in the skirt of sequin Cluny lace, and white tulle bodice with draped fichu of striped Ninon, outlined with silk and iridescent bugle fringe. The inner vest is of sequin lace, back and front, and the shell-shaped white tulle sleeves are outlined with fringe. Her morning frock is of pale rose pink linen, with embroidered panels. The bodice is of white muslin worked with pink spots and shoulder-pieces of embroidered pink linen. A narrow black satin tie, embroidered in pink and gold, forms an elegant finish to the costume.

Miss Relph's dress is of silver grey Ninon, with the draped bodice-top of Tambour lace over blue chiffon, held in place by bands of oxydised and iridescent trimming studded with turquoises; the sleeves are of blue tulle. Her morning frock is of tussore, inlet with waved bands of filet net, with narrow piping of chestnut-brown silk, the top part of the bodice, sleeves, and neck being all cut in one piece of Valenciennes lace.

Mr. Wentworth Croke has specially engaged Miss Grace Lester to create a character part—that of Black Meg—in Mr. Hall Caine's new version of The Christian at the Lyceum Theatre. The production is fixed for Aug. 31.

A double performance will distinguish the last night of the present season at the Savoy Theatre, which will be reached on Saturday, Aug. 24. The performance will begin at 4 p.m. with the first act of The Yeomen of the Guard, followed by the second act of The Gondoliers. There will then be an interval from 6.45 until 8 p.m., when the second act of Patience will be given, and afterwards the first act of Iolanthe will be presented. At the fall of the curtain the National Anthem will be sung by the whole company, accompanied by the orchestra of the Savoy Theatre and the military band of Iolanthe.

Miss Edna May has been chosen Queen of the Ka-noo-no Karnival, which is to be held in her home city of Syracuse, New York, next September. Miss May was born in Syracuse, and lived there until she went on the stage to win fame in The Belle of New York. It is understood that Miss May will not refuse the highly-sought honour, and that she and her husband, Mr. Oscar Lewisohn, will go to America to take part in the carnival, which is held during State Fair week.

The time for the lodging of claims for compensation for loss of life consequent upon the stranding of the Berlin at the Hook of Holland has been extended by the Court till October 30 next.

In the Court of Chancery on the 26th ult., application was made on behalf of the Waldorf Theatre Syndicate (Limited) for an interim order for the appointment of a custodian of the theatre and for leave to serve notice of writ out of the jurisdiction of the court. Defendant, it was stated, was the lessee of the theatre, and resided in New York. According to the affidavits the lessee had carried on the theatre up to July 19, on which day his agent left the key at the office of the syndicate with the intimation that the lessee intended to have nothing more to do with the theatre. They now wanted an injunction to restrain the breaches of the lease, an order for the interim custody of the property, and damages and costs.

Mr. Leonard Boyne will start his autumn tour of the phenomenally successful Raffles on August 5th. The towns to be visited take in Liverpool, Bristol, Hull, Manchester, and Birmingham, and among the suburban theatres included in the tour will be the Borough, Stratford, and the Coronet.

Miss Topsy Sinden reappeared at the Gaiety Theatre on Monday. She was warmly welcomed, and her dances were appreciated and encored. She had another striking dance inserted on Friday in The Girls of Gottenburg.

Mr. H. A. Saintsbury is under contract to Mr. Maundy-Gregory, who however has received a request from a brother manager to allow him Mr. H. A. Saintsbury's services for a period. Nothing definite has yet been settled.

Genuine old-fashioned pantomime is to be revived this year in the provinces. Mr. Maundy-Gregory is convinced that there is room now for the legitimate pantomime with its ballet, telling an entirely different story, and the whole a reminiscence of old-time Christmas fare.

Miss Maud Fealy, the clever young actress who occupied the distinguished position of leading lady to Sir Henry Irving during the latter part of the great actor's career, was married to Mr. Louis F. Sherwin at Denver, U.S.A., on July 15. The bride, who was born in Memphis in 1883, made her first appearance in England in the part of the heroine, Alice Faulkner, in Mr. William Gillette's production of Sherlock Holmes at the Lyceum in 1901. Later she became a member of Mr. E. S. Willard's company, her engagement with Sir Henry Irving beginning in 1904. Mr. Sherwin, who is an Englishman, is the dramatic critic of a Denver newspaper.

Baron Harriss's Prince of Pilsen company had a distinguished patron the other day, when the merry musical comedy was witnessed with obvious delight from a private box by Mr. Hall Caine. Subsequently the gifted author found his way behind the curtain and congratulated Miss Sophie Harriss upon the merits of her performance and the general excellence of the production.

The British Empire Shakespeare Society is growing rapidly in numbers and importance, as is indicated by the inauguration of an annual general festival, the first being fixed at Stratford-on-Avon during the first week in October, when four performances of The Merchant of Venice will be given at the Memorial Theatre—in the evenings of the 1st and 3rd, and in the afternoons of the 2nd and 4th. The cast, which will be a double one and is being arranged by Mr. Acton Bond, is to be entirely composed of amateur members of the society from all parts of the kingdom.

The following awards were made at the conclusion of the Midsummer term of the Royal College of Music on Saturday last: Council exhibitions—Singing, Beatrice B. Smith (£6), Fannie Zausmer (£7), H. Dilys Jones (£15), Hilda M. Wright (£7), Maud E. Wright (£9); violin, Evelyn M. Pickup (£6). The London Musical Society's prize for singing (value £3 3s.) went to F. Geraldine B. Wilson; Messrs. Goossens (violin); and the Savage Club Exhibition to Mary M. Bond-Andrews (singing).

Counsel read affidavits, from which it appeared that the theatre had been left unsecured, that the police had found three or four persons on the premises and had removed them. There was also no fireman left on the premises, which was a breach of the County Council's regulations, and, consequently, endangered the licence of the theatre. It was necessary that a caretaker and fireman should be on the premises, and that the water which accumulated in the theatre should be pumped out every two or three days. His Lordship said he would not grant an injunction. He would consent to a custodian of the property until the second motion day of the next sittings, and give leave to serve the notice of the writ out of the jurisdiction of the court.

Theatrical plays will also be booked as opportunity serves.

The beautiful grounds of Endcliffe Hall, Sheffield, presented a brilliant appearance on the 25th ult., when the local members of the British Empire Shakespeare Society acted The Two Gentlemen of Verona, under the direction of Miss May Gladwin, a talented local artist and amateur actress. The stage was simply but tastefully arranged, and the costumes were effectively displayed by the background of foliage. The appointments, &c., were lent by the Lyceum management. Miss May Gladwin acted in a graceful and refined manner as Julia, and Miss Helen Roberts was a lively Silvia. Dr. Dakin Mart proved excellent as Valentine, and the other characters were adequately represented. At the conclusion, the Bishop of Sheffield, the president of the society, expressed the thanks of the audience for the delightful performance, and bestowed warm approval of the efforts of Miss May Gladwin, to whom a bouquet was presented by Mrs. Gardner Harrison.

Several weeks ago mention was made in these columns that the Liverpool Royal Court Theatre was, during the "close" season, undergoing considerable renovation and decoration. Mr. Robert Arthur has done the work exceedingly well, and when, on Monday next, the public gain admission to witness the opening season's production, Beauty and the Barge, they will certainly be agreeably surprised by the elegance of the interior. In the entire re-seating of the floor of the house tip-up easy chairs have taken the place of the old hard seats in the pit-stalls, a popular part. On Monday a booking innovation comes into force. In future the pit-stalls are to be reservable on the day of performance only. This is a novelty in Liverpool, and is being introduced by Mr. Arthur Lawrence, Mr. Robert Arthur's popular acting-manager.

Death has this week robbed us of one of our oldest actors in the person of Mr. George Yates, who passed away at Dalston in the early hours of Tuesday morning last at the advanced age of eighty-one years, after a severe illness borne with exemplary fortitude. Mr. Yates, whose real name was George William Cleghorn, began his career at Cardiff with Miss Amy Sedgwick and Mr. J. Carter Edwards. He always took heavy parts, and had played seconds to such stars as Charles Matthews, Charles Kean, James Anderson, the Wigans, and Mlle. Beatrice. He was for nearly thirty years a member of the company at the Pavilion Theatre, Mile End.

In the sixties he played heavy leading business for seven years with Mr. Chute's stock company at Bath and Bristol, and was for a long period with Mrs. Nye Chart at Brighton. Among distinguished performers with whom Mr. Yates was associated in the course of his long career were Miss Ellen Terry, Mrs. Kendal, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Vezin, Mr. Charles Coghlan, Miss Desborough, and many others. Included in his most notable impersonations were those of Mephistopheles in Faust, and Jacob M'Closky in The Octoroon. In Dan'l Druce and a round of Shakespearean lead he was a great success in South Africa, whither he went with Captain Disney Roebuck in 1876 and remained for two years.

The veteran actor, who had passed his fifty years of service on the stage, was greatly respected, and his widow, Mrs. Harriett Clifton Yates, who is herself well known in the profession, will have the sympathies of all in her bereavement. The deceased leaves an only son, Mr. George Clifton Yates, also to mourn his loss. The funeral was announced for yesterday (Friday) at Abney Park.

In the last-named piece his clever daughter, Miss Bessie Hatton, appeared with success. Mr. Hatton produced in America a dramatic version of Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter," and was the author of "With Irving in America" and "Reminiscences of J. L. Toole." He gave readings from his works both in England and America.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

Christie Murray's Début.

The late David Christie Murray, prolific novelist and charming essayist, whose much-regretted death took place on Thursday last, at the age of sixty, made his first, and possibly only, appearance as an actor in his own comedy-drama, in three acts, entitled Ned's Chum, which was tried for a single night at the Globe Theatre in the August of 1891. In some points his performance revealed his inexperience, and he was, naturally, rather nervous; but it was on the whole decidedly creditable and promising. Mr. Murray repeated his attempt when Ned's Chum was put on for a week at the same theatre in the year after; and his impersonation was found to be considerably improved.

"Reynolds'" has an anecdote which needs substantiation, but is worth quoting for its cleverness. The writer says:—Mr. George Alexander is much troubled by amateurs, who believe themselves born for the stage, and who come to him for advice. One of these, the scion of a noble family, whose talent is patent only to himself, was continually pestering Mr. Alexander, and various were the ruses which the latter adopted to evade him. Walking along the Strand one day Mr. Alexander espied the would-be actor hurrying towards him. There seemed to be no way of escape. A barber's shop, however, was at hand, and into this Mr. Alexander dashed. To the astonishment of the proprietor and his assistants, he seized an apron that lay on a chair, tied it round him, and commenced to lather one of the customers assiduously. Meanwhile his tormentor entered the shop, and looked round. "Pardon me," he remarked to the proprietor; "I thought I saw Mr. Alexander come in here, but I must have been mistaken," and out he walked, much to the manager's satisfaction.

Criticism at the Cape.

South African criticism is evidently inclined to be florid. A recent notice in a Cape Town paper of Mrs. Brown Potter's performance in La Belle Marseillaise reads as follows:—"Care has not passed this magnificent actress by. She has had her full meed of tears and grief, and yet with the braverie that belongs to her great race, she can eat her tears and rejoice. . . . So long have we been listening to mediocrities that the genius of Mrs. Brown Potter is like a breath of spring. Her wonderful personality pervades everything. She clears up the fog with a decisive motion of her hand. When one sees her one forgets melodrama and the turgid sentimentality of a fast-dying day. The lithe, swift body conforms to every feature of the play, and the clear, beautiful tones redeem the playwright's inconsequences."

Mrs. Tree as Titania.

The Yorkshire Evening Post says:—"The manager of the Bridlington Spa had a difficult part to play on Monday night. Mrs. Beerbohm Tree, who was opening the new theatre, said she presumed that the part she was playing was that of a godmother. Perhaps Mr. Haigh, she continued, referring to the gentleman in faultless evening dress beside her, was a sort of godfather. Mr. Hague might be Oberon and she Titania. So having arranged her cast, she recited some beautiful verses from A Midsummer Night's Dream, and coming to the line, 'Hand in hand with fairy grace,' she extended her hand to the blushing manager, and slyly asked the audience if they saw 'the fairy grace.'"

Not for Repose.

The Morning Leader says: The Era has this advertisement—"Wanted, to sell, 181 orchestra stalls and 156 dress circle stalls of the Savoy Theatre. Frames black wood, with seats covered peacock blue plush. Secretary, Savoy Theatre, London." But the rumour is untrue that the seats covered in peacock blue plush are to be replaced with uncovered wooden substitutes, fitted with high, straight backs, and warranted hard, in order to assist the student of the Shavian drama, shortly to be installed on those classic boards, in his battle with sleep.

H. A. Jones on America.

"Of course," says Mr. Henry Arthur Jones, in an interview in the Daily Chronicle, "people will say that I have personal reasons for praising America. I most certainly have. None the less, it would be my conviction anyhow that there is more life, more vigour, more relation to actuality and the national character about the stage in America than there is over here just now. The drama is more part of the people's existence, and, good or bad, they take it more seriously. I don't contend that at this moment America is producing better plays than we are. But it will, if things go on as they have done. These dramatic classes, for instance, that have been started at the American universities are by no means mere crankish, pedantic affairs. They are most sensibly conducted. They will not make playwrights, of course. But if there are any young fellows with the heart of the thing in them these classes will bring them along and save them years of unacted, barren failure.

A National Theatre.

"Moreover, I would still wager that New York gets its national theatre long before London does. There was, I happen to know, a considerable deal of truth behind the rumours of the 'millionaires' theatre' for which is was proposed to entice Mr. Granville Barker over the Atlantic as producer. I understand, too, that the scheme is to be gone on with.

The Trust System Commended.

"As for the £20,000,000 trust, of which there has been so much talk during these past few days, I cannot see that there is anything to fear in it. Great art though it is, the drama must be conducted upon business methods. Under the present circumstances practically every new play of any ambitions costs its £1000 a week. Accordingly, anything that makes for more competent business-management must have a good effect. So far as I can see, the long run system—which is the fruit of so many evils—might be less necessary under a big trust than under a smaller speculator who needs to make his immediate profits. From the purely artistic point of view, I don't think there would be much change—at any rate for the worse—if the trust did come. Anyhow, you have the curious fact that until the trusts arrived the American drama was but a poor thing. Now it is showing genuine vitality.

"Michael and His Lost Angel."

"The failure of Michael and His Lost Angel at the Lyceum in 1896," said Mr. Jones, "was the cruellest blow I ever had. It kept me back for years. If it had succeeded I should have done, I think, better as well as more serious work since. Still, I have not finished yet. I might tell you now that Michael and His Lost Angel was originally offered to Sir Henry Irving and Miss Ellen Terry."

Dramatic Statistics.

In regard to the theatrical year 1906-7, says the Daily Mirror, while commercially it was a success, comparatively few new plays were staged, as will be seen from the following list; Plays of two or more acts, forty-four; one-act plays, twenty-three; musical plays, thirteen; revivals of plays, twenty-one. No fewer than eleven of the plays new to London were of American origin, viz.: The Prince Chap, Mrs. Temple's Telegram, Julie Bonbon, Dorothy o' the Hall, The Truth, Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch, Brewster's Millions, Strongheart, The Last of His Race, In the Bishop's Carriage, and The Earl of Pawtucket. Of the twenty-three one-act plays, five were written entirely by ladies.

The origin of The 18th Century is an anonymous play called To-Morrow, which was produced at the Paisley Theatre in the February of 1904. The authors of the present piece are apparently indebted to this drama, which is now announced as by Edward J. Malyon and C. James, for the central idea of their drama, To-Morrow being the property of Mr. Edward Compton, who opened his season at the St. James's on Monday evening. The 18th Century is divided into three acts and four scenes. In the first scene we gather that Nicholas, the Ninth Earl of Laidlaw, is engaged to a young heiress named Stacey Trevor-Coke, a fresh and simple-minded young girl whose purity and simplicity are in strong contrast with the wanton freedom of Lady Antony Frayle, whose husband is abroad, and who in his absence is "carrying-on" with Nicholas. Stacey feels that the union into which she is about to enter is a cold and heartless one, and in an interview with the Earl she endeavours to place matters upon a higher footing. But Nicholas gives her his cynical view of marriage, and tells her that she must expect him to go his own way, while he, on his side, will allow her to go hers. Stacey's remonstrances, however, make an impression on Nicholas, and he broods over them alone. Then his thoughts go back to the ancestors from whom he inherits his vices, and he apostrophises them en masse. One of the pictures on the wall drops from its nail, and in a hole is found a philtre by which the Earl and his valet are suddenly "switched back" into the eighteenth century, the other characters in the first scene also being duplicated in the second. Stacey becomes Anastasia Coke, beloved by Ensign Rupert Trevor, and forced into marriage with Nicholas by her two guardians. Lady Anthony Frayle, whose husband the Earl, it appears, has slain in a duel, is indignant at the proposed union; and, being scorned by Trevor, urges Nicholas to kill him; while Anastasia implores the Earl to spare the man she loves and release her. The Earl's better nature makes him consent to the girl's requests; but he is so sorely affronted by the Ensign that a combat takes place in which the latter is slain, the horrified Laidlaw and his valet drinking an antidote and returning to contemporary life quite cured of any illusions as to the advantages of life in the eighteenth century. Taught by his experience in the other world, Nicholas returns to present-day life a changed man, and is able to reassure his betrothed as to their future.

The acting was excellent. Mr. Edward Compton, who is always at his best in an eighteenth-century part, appeared with equal ability as the modern and the ancient Earl. In the first act, as the cynical and self-indulgent Nicholas, he treated the scenes between the Earl and the unsophisticated Stacey Trevor-Coke with all the ease, acuteness, and gracious tact that were required, the dashes of more serious expression being put in with the practised hand of an experienced and accomplished artist. Mr. Compton cut a very elegant figure in the attire of the eighteenth century, and his expression of the stormy impulses of the Earl's dissolute ancestor was very intense and vigorous. Altogether, Mr. Compton may be credited with an impersonation of remarkable merit, which will add greatly to his high and well-won reputation. The fact that such a consummate artist as Mr. Eric Lewis was cast as Mr. Dormer shows how liberal Mr. Compton was in collecting his company, and it need hardly be said that Mr. Lewis made the most of the part. He was the essence of polished valetdom, and the delicate comedy of the impersonation was extremely effective, Mr. Dormer's embarrassment when pursued by his ghostly wife being excessively amusing. Mr. Charles Groves and Mr. E. M. Robson worked together well as the two guardians, their angry altercations and repeated reconciliations being carried out with admirable heartiness and vigour. These two sound and experienced artists supplied character-sketches of genuine value and excellence. Mr. G. Wallace Johnston played neatly and crisply as the Warrilows; and Mr. Benedick Butler as the Honourable Algernon Pinkerton of the one age and the Lieutenant Pinkerton of the other was equally alert and effective. Mr. Henry Ainley looked as picturesque in the evening dress of to-day as in the regimentals of an officer of 1745; and in the latter displayed an amount of fire and passion which made his performance a memorable one. Mr. Philip Gordon, with a good make-up, rendered Warne a distinct and diverting personage; and Mr. Reginald E. Besant did good work as Charles. Miss Suzanne Sheldon was quite up to date as the Lady Antony Frayle of the first scene of the piece, and as the amorous and vindictive demi-rep of the eighteenth century Miss Sheldon acted with a remarkable amount of energy and expression, her depiction of the impetuous passion of Lady Anthony being full of power and intensity. Miss Phyllis Relph was smart and bright as Dolly Laidlaw; Miss Marion Ashworth hit off the characteristics of Mary Molyneux cleverly; and it would be difficult to overpraise either Miss Grace Lane's Stacey Trevor-Coke or her Anastasia. The leading characteristic of both was a chaste and refined delicacy and charm as rare as they were pleasing and prepossessing. The winning grace of the ingenuous Stacey and the sentimental artlessness of Anastasia were only variations in the same key of exquisite maidenhood. Miss Marie Hassell played the buxom housekeeper of the old abbey very spiritedly and with an acceptable sense of humour; and Miss Dolly Stamp was efficient as the Black Page.

An important feature of the production was the scenery by Mr. Joseph Harker. Nothing could have been better than the way in which the changes were worked, and the first set was especially artistic. The dresses were very handsome and elaborate, and the incidental music, arranged by Henry W. May and H. E. Loseby, was judiciously prepared, Mr. R. M. Crompton's gavotte being an agreeable and enlivening composition. The 18th Century had a cordial reception, and a few well-chosen words from Mr. Compton brought the evening to a cheerful close.

"A NIGHT OUT" REVIVED.

On Tuesday, July 30, at the Criterion Theatre, revival of the Farcical Comedy, in three acts, by Georges Feydeau and Maurice Desvallières.

Joseph Pinglet ..... Mr. George Giddens
Paillard ..... Mr. Bertram Steer
Mathieu ..... Mr. Frederick Volpé
Maxime ..... Mr. George Desmond
Brochard ..... Mr. Reginald Walter
Boulot ..... Mr. Lawrence White
Bastien ..... Mr. F. W. Permain
Ernest ..... Mr. Geoffrey Saville
Botticelli ..... Mr. P. L. Julian
Marcelle ..... Miss Marguerite Leslie
Angelique ..... Miss Alice Beet
A Lady ..... Miss Millicent Forsyth
Victorine ..... Miss Frances Vine
Hyacinthe ..... Miss Nell Toller
Violette ..... Miss Violet Hollom
Rose ..... Miss Leonora Caldwell
Margerite ..... Miss May Hollom

Mr. Charles Klein's adaptation of MM. Georges Feydeau and Maurice Desvallières's farce Hôtel du Libre Exchange, revised by Mr. Seymour Hicks, was presented at the Vaudeville Theatre, in the April of 1896, with Mr. George Giddens as Joseph Pinglet, Mr. Charles Sugden as Paillard, Mr. William Wyes as Mathieu, Mr. Aubrey Fitzgerald as Maxime, Miss Fannie Ward as Marcelle, Mrs. Edmund Phelps as Angelique, and Miss Pattie Browne as Victorine. It is doubtful if serious criticism is applicable to such a piece of exquisite absurdity; at any rate, it would be superfluous at this date, in face of the inextinguishable laughter that greeted the play night after night for a year and a half after its production at the Vaudeville. The revival at the Criterion Theatre on Tuesday was received with an amount of favour which showed that the piece had lost nothing of its laughter-provoking power. Nothing could be better in its way than the Joseph Pinglet of Mr. George Giddens. He has a style and an individuality entirely his own; and, in this particular part, both are very valuable. From first to last his reading is in the truest vein of comedy. The personality of the little builder is distinctly defined, the habitual demureness of the individual being finely contrasted with the impulsive effusiveness which he develops under the influence of amorous emotions. From first to last Mr. Giddens's Pinglet is kept in the same key of dry and quiet drollery. Even the extravagant "business" of the rôle is never overdone; and in the wildest scenes of farce Mr. Giddens's practised art enables him to subject his most irresistible absurdities to the most artistic control. So entirely intelligent and natural is the impersonation, that the practical fun in the Hôtel Mascotte seems as unforced and "inevitable" as the more restrained humour of the henpecked husband in the first division of the piece. Mr. Giddens's Pinglet has lost none of its many excellent qualities; and it was received at the Criterion on Tuesday with all the enthusiasm which greeted it at the Vaudeville in 1896. Mr. Bertram Steer is a most agreeable representative of Paillard, his bright, breezy, and excellent style and appearance commending him to the audience from the first. His quick and vivid conception of the character greatly increases the "conviction" created by the performance generally. Mr. Frederick Volpé is irresistible as Mathieu, the "dunder-headed" amiability of the elderly widower being suggested with a reality and humour that are worthy of the warmest praise. Aided by an effective make-up, Mr. Volpé's performance is one of the most amusing in the cast. Mr. George Deamond gives a very satisfactory depiction of the studious "hobbadehoy" Maxime; and Mr. Reginald Walter is official propriety itself as the stern and upright Inspector of Police. Mr. Lawrence White is unimpeachable as the elder waiter, and plays the part with commendable care and cleverness, and Mr. F. W. Permain supplies a neat sketch of the younger waiter, Bastien. Mr. Geoffrey Saville does useful work as Ernest; and Mr. P. L. Julian contributes a most picturesque and emphatic interpretation of the rôle of Botticelli. Miss Marguerite Leslie's handsome figure and general attractiveness make her a most acceptable exponent of the character of Marcelle; and she acts with much intelligence and expressiveness. Miss Alice Beet gives a thoroughly incisive and alert embodiment of Angelique, sharp and clear, but not in the least overdone; and Miss Millicent Forsyth makes a fine appearance as A Lady. Miss Nell Toller, Miss Violet Hollom, Miss Leonora Caldwell, and Miss May Hollom are a delightful bevy of daughters; and Miss Frances Vine endows Victorine with all the necessary dash and artfulness. The production, under the direction of Mr. George Giddens, went with a swing and a spirit which were irresistible; and the laughter which the farce evoked was sufficient testimony to the complete success of the experiment.

DEATH OF JOSEPH HATTON.

We regret to announce the death on Wednesday, at the age of sixty-six, of Mr. Joseph Hatton, who was the son of Francis Augustus Hatton, the founder of the Derbyshire Times. He came to London in 1868 to conduct the Gentleman's Magazine. For some years he acted as special correspondent in Europe of the New York Times and Sydney Morning Herald, and he represented the Standard on a special mission to America. Sir Henry Irving and J. L. Toole were among his dearest friends, and he prepared Irving's "Impressions of America" and Toole's "Reminiscences" for the press. His novels "Clytie" and "When Greek meets Greek" were dramatised; and he also wrote the following plays: John Needham's Double, Liz, A Daughter of France, a version of Jack Sheppard produced at the Pavilion Theatre, with Mr. Weedon Grossmith in the leading part, and The Prince and the Pauper, adapted from Mark Twain's book. He was the author of a dramatic version of Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter," which made a success in America. His gossiping "Cigarette Papers" in the People, of which he was the editor, were widely read. Joseph Hatton was in his early days an officer in the Volunteer Artillery, and his interest in the Volunteer movement was long maintained. Miss Bessie Hatton, the younger daughter of the deceased, was educated at a convent school in the Ardennes and Bedford College, London, and commenced the study of her future profession under Mrs. Chippendale. She made her first London appearance in 1889 at the Globe, with Richard Mansfield, playing the Prince of Wales in Richard III., afterwards playing Gennarino in La Tosca, with John Hare at the Garrick, appeared at the Shaftesbury as Lady Eve in Henry Arthur Jones's Judah, and went to America during her father's visit to the States, and repeated with E. S. Willard her impersonation of Lady Eve. On returning to London she enacted the dual rôle of the Prince and the Pauper in her father's dramatisation of Mark Twain's famous romance, and afterwards played François in Richelieu at the Lyceum with Sir Henry Irving. She was the Lucy White in the London production of The Professor's Love Story, with Mr. Willard, at the Garrick. She is an accomplished authoress.

MR. BOURCHIER AT THE GARRICK.

Mr. Bourchier, in answer to repeated calls and a demand for a speech, at the conclusion of the performance of The Walls of Jericho, at the Garrick Theatre on the 26th ult, said: Ladies and gentlemen, it would be very ungrateful were I to let you go this evening without thanking you sincerely for the liberal support you have extended to us for the past twelve months. Not even the hot weather has been able to loosen the cement of your favour towards Mr. Sutro's famous Walls of Jericho. But, ladies and gentlemen, some of the original stones in these walls need to be freshened by the process of a little rest. After a brief holiday we propose, in the early autumn, to pay a visit to our friends in the provinces, and we shall take to them some nine plays, our repertory being a versatile one ranging from grave to gay, and including, besides The Walls of Jericho, two plays of Shakespeare (The Merchant of Venice and Macbeth), The Duel, Doctor Johnson, The Arm of the Law, and The Bishop's Move. In the course of our wandering we shall produce, in Manchester, a new play called Simple Simon, written by Murray Carson and a lady whose name will be new to you—Miss Norah Keith. Although out of sight, we shall not be idle, and may we hope that we shall not be entirely out of mind? On our return we hope to give some performances of The Arm of the Law and The Bishop's Move, and the encouragement which you gave last winter to our series of matinées of Macbeth has emboldened us to put that play into our evening bill. About Christmas time also we shall give some matinées of The Merchant of Venice. How long it will be before we meet again will depend upon my friend and colleague, Sydney Valentine, whose comedy of English rural life, written by himself and Mrs. Blundell, entitled Fiander's Widow, is now in active preparation. That you will extend to him a very full measure of your favour both as actor and author is my most earnest hope. If you read the daily papers you will learn that there are voices in the air, disturbing the theatrical firmament, and they utter the awesome word "trust." A few days ago an interviewer sought me out—from under a motor-car beneath which I had crawled for refuge—and plied me with questions. When I informed him that I believed in the theatrical trust as the foundation of all theatrical stability he became voluble indeed, entreating me to tell him the names of my fellow-directors, or the theatres we control, the authors and actors we meant to crush, our capital, and so on. When he ceased, I assured him that the one trust in which I put my whole faith is my confidence in the judgment of the British public, without which no theatrical enterprise, however ambitious, can hope to succeed. It gives me much pleasure to announce to you that my next season's work will include a play founded upon Sir Gilbert Parker's most popular novel—one that his publishers tell me has been read by millions—"The Right of Way." I deem myself fortunate that Sir Gilbert has handed me a dramatic presentation of Charlie Steele which I venture to hope will win your favour when he "struts and frets" upon this stage. Permit me, on behalf of my wife, my company, and myself, to bid you au revoir.

ACTORS' ASSOCIATION.

The usual weekly meeting of the Actors' Association was held at 10, King-street, Covent Garden, on Tuesday, when there were present Mr. H. Athol Forde (chairman), Mr. Henry W. Mote (hon. solicitor), and Messrs. Arthur Applin, Cecil Brooking, Fredk. Morland, and Charles Cruikshanks (secretary). As there was not a sufficient number to form a quorum at 2.45, those present formed themselves into a meeting of the Finance and General Purposes Committee. Mr. Athol Forde was elected chairman, and the business of the agenda was proceeded with.

The hon. solicitors reported an interview with a member and stated the particulars of her claim, and they were requested to write for payment. The hon. solicitors stated they had interviewed a member as to her claim under her contract with a manager. She attended before the Council and stated the nature of her claim, but the Council were of opinion that she was not entitled to damages for breach of contract, inasmuch as she rehearsed on approval. The hon. solicitors reported they had written to a former member's solicitor in reply to his letter, declining to give any information or do anything in the matter.

A member attended before the Council and stated the nature of his claim, he having been engaged to play in a sketch, and after rehearsal, dismissed. The hon. solicitors reported they had written claiming damages, and were requested to write again and issue summons if necessary.

The hon. solicitors reported they had had an interview with a member and written another letter on his behalf but had not received any reply. They also reported they had written on behalf of two members as to their claims against a manager, and had received a reply, copies of which they had forwarded to the members in question. The hon. solicitors referred to the correspondence they had had with a member as to his contract with a manager respecting arrears of salary due to him. They were requested to write to the manager making the necessary claim, and afterwards report to the Council.

It was agreed that the offices should be closed next Monday, it being Bank Holiday. The secretary stated that the premium required by the Sun Insurance Office for insurance of the staff was £1 1s. 3d. He was directed to effect the insurance.

The Chairman read a letter from Mr. Herbert Blackmore, the secretary of the Theatrical Managers' Association, acknowledging receipt of letter and enclosure upon the subject of the "Minimum or Living Wage," and stating that he expected to bring it before his Council shortly.

Dr. N. I. Spriggs, of Shrewsbury, was elected an hon. medical officer to the Actors' Association.

The report of the Finance and General Purposes Committee was given, and it was agreed that future meetings of this committee be postponed until further notice.

Two former members were reinstated.

LYRIC THEATRE, HAMMERSMITH.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—The advertisement which my directors instructed me to insert in your issue of last week seems to have caused some misunderstanding. The position of affairs in respect to the Lyric were as follows:—

The London County Council some months ago served notices requiring most extensive alterations, such as a new staircase from the very top floor of the dressing-rooms to the street, new staircase from the gallery, new exit from the pit, a reconstruction of the whole of the dress circle, and a new staircase and exit from same, together with some three dozen other requirements.

About a month ago the Council served a further notice, requiring a complete re-wiring of the theatre.

There was at this time some rent owing, and it meant my directors either finding a large sum of money for the alterations or letting the freeholder take possession for rent.

They chose the latter course. The theatre had been run at a serious loss, and they did not feel justified in bolstering up a property of which they had only eighteen months' lease to run.—Yours faithfully,

SAMUEL JAMES.

THE MOODY-MANNERS COMPANY.

On Saturday, July 2, at the Lyric Theatre, the Opera, by Wagner, entitled "TRISTAN AND ISOLDA."

Tristan ..... Mr. Joseph O'Mara
King Mark ..... Mr. Chas. Magrath
Kurvenal ..... Mr. William Dever
Melot ..... Mr. T. C. Fairbairn
Shepherd ..... Mr. V. Brodo
Steersman ..... Mr. J. Johnstone
Brangana ..... Miss Toni Seiter
Isolda ..... Mme. Fanny Moody

The advent of Mr. John Coates on Friday evening, the 26th ult., in the character of Lohengrin, lent additional interest to the representation of that popular work by the Moody-Manners company, and the English tenor received a hearty welcome from a large house. Since he first appeared at the Globe Theatre in the short-lived The Gay Pretenders some few years since, Mr. Coates has studied to much advantage, and his reputation, deservedly high as it is, has not been gained without strenuous work. Like the late Sims Reeves, he started his career as a baritone; but in the heyday of the former artist the difficulties of opera were not so great as they are now; and English tenors then had not the cadences of Wagner to contend with. In the character of the Knight of the Swan we doubt if we have a native-born tenor that is so well suited, and from his first entry as the chivalrous champion of Elsa he quite gripped the idiosyncracies of the part. Dignified and gentle in his bearing towards Elsa in the Courtyard scene, he became more impassioned in the long duet in the third act; and the proclamation of his identity and the final departure set the seal upon his triumph. It might have been objected, perhaps, that so ethereal a being as Lohengrin would scarcely have displayed so much fury in the killing of Telramund, but this is hypercriticism. The house acclaimed its pleasure at the fine singing of the artist at every opportunity, and we cannot but regard the engagement as a fortunate one. Mme. De Vere's Elsa was another completely satisfying impersonation. Her purity of voice was exemplified, especially in the beautiful music of the dream, and also in the solo on the balcony. The messa voce effects were charming, and the intonation true. The portrayal was always sympathetic and tender. Mr. Lewys James as Frederick of Telramund made a truculent figure of this recreant Knight, singing the music admirably; Miss Toni Seiter's Ortrud lacked none of the qualities of hate, and was a sinister and interesting personage throughout; and Mr. Charles Magrath's King had weight, dignity, and sonority, Mr. Eile completing the cast very ably as the Herald. The chorus may specially be commended in the Wedding music, and the band, under Signor Sapio, played the prelude to the third act with fine tone and precision.

Music lovers, who were not limited to those who come under the specific category of "Wagnerians," flocked to the Lyric Theatre on Saturday for the production in English of Wagner's Tristan and Isolda. And, indeed, it can be said that Mr. Charles Manners and Miss Fanny Moody have done a great deal to popularise this very delightful opera. The only frequent performances of this work have hitherto been left to German artists, and the contrast to their unvarying interpretations afforded by the freshness and purity of the English voices and their method of attacking the phrases has been much commented upon. As to the orchestra, one cannot too highly commend the manner in which, under Herr Eckhold's excellent conductorship, it carried out its share of the work. The orchestration is of great importance in Tristan and Isolda, and a splendid—and successful—attempt was made to preserve in the musical scheme the proportion between the voices and the instruments.

Mme. Fanny Moody created a most favourable impression by her interpretation of the part of Isolda. The freshness and beauty of her voice was, if anything, enhanced by a variety of explanatory gestures and facial expressions. Whatever impression the composer may intend to convey to his hearers is always accentuated by the method and abilities of the performers, and in this respect Mme. Fanny Moody beautifully illustrated the changing moods of Isolda as bitter hatred gave way to ardent love. Rarely, perhaps, has this artist appeared to greater advantage and demonstrated the fact that this country is not absolutely dependent on foreign talent. In the Liebestod she exhibited a smoothness and delicacy of feeling which called forth the warm approval of the audience. Mr. Joseph O'Mara as Tristan was greatly helped by his considerable histrionic gifts. In the love scene, however, he seemed to lack responsive power, but there is no question that what was really a very conscientious rendering of a difficult part will improve with repetition. Mr. William Dever looked the part of Kurvenal, and he possesses a fine voice. Mr. Charles Magrath made an excellent King Mark, his voice showing a considerable degree of flexibility and resonance. Miss Toni Seiter was well suited to the part of Brangana, while Mr. T. C. Fairbairn, Mr. V. Brodo, and Mr. J. Johnstone gave careful renderings of the parts of Melot, the Shepherd, and the Steersman respectively.

On Thursday the Moody-Manners company gave, for the first time in London, a very adequate interpretation of Verdi's Aida. The cast included Mr. O'Mara as Radames, Mme. De Vere Sapio as Aïda, Mr. Macgrath as the King, Miss Toni Seiter as Amneris, Mr. Lewys James as Amonasro, and Mr. Manners as Ramphis. The audience was very enthusiastic, and at the close, after many recalls, Mr. Manners thanked the audience for their support, upon which he said really depended the success or failure of an endeavour to give permanently performances of grand opera in English. "It only rests with you to give me your support," said Mr. Manners, and the audience answered "We will."

DRESSES AT THE PLAY.

Miss Marguerite Leslie as Mrs. Paillard in A Night Out at the Criterion has some very elegant dresses, amongst them a white evening tulle gown showered with silver and mounted upon pink tulle. The silver is becomingly arranged in stripes and a deep band of silver embroidery edges the skirt. Her hair is filleted with an old rose ribbon caught up by a jewelled comb, and Miss Millicent Forsyth, who plays "A Lady," wears a smart pale blue net toilette bordered with roses embroidered in floss silk, intertwined with ribbon and handsome white lace à jour. Over her shoulders is a wide plum-coloured scarf of unadorned taffetas, threaded through a diamond heart-shaped buckle at the back. A purple hat is decorated with roses to match.

Torquay Theatre was reopened on Monday, after extensive renovation, the theatre being rendered much more attractive both inside and out. The foyer and vestibule have been repapered with a rose-tree freize, the woodwork being treated with white enamel and gold-painted. The upper circle and pit stalls have also been re-upholstered, and the general appointments brought up to date under the able supervision of Mr. W. H. Mortimer, the managing-director.

THE ALHAMBRA.

The "Urbanora" animated pictures still remain one of the most appreciated items in the Alhambra's fine programme, an especially interesting and clear series of films being those representing incidents in connection with the Launching of H.M.S. Bellerophon at Portsmouth Dockyard on July 27. The preparations for the releasing of the biggest warship in the world are graphically depicted. H.R.H. Princess Henry of Battenberg is seen cutting the cord, and as the mammoth vessel gradually slides into the water to the strains of "Rule Britannia" the enthusiasm of the audience is loudly expressed. Another fine set of pictures are those illustrative of Mr. Carl Hagenbeck's famous wild animal park at Stellingen, Germany. The animals are seen in the enjoyment of their semi-freedom in apparently natural surroundings, and the many films shown are both interesting and amusing. The Gipsy's Bride is an exciting little drama, and The Short-Sighted Cyclist is a most amusing and ingenious comic series, laughter being continuous throughout its representation. Another favourite turn is the exceptionally smart acrobatic and Risley act given by the Yiulians Family, the clever troupe all being expert and finished performers. The bearers toss about and catch the lads with wonderful precision and apparent ease, the youngsters seeming to thoroughly enjoy the exercise. All are enthusiastic workers, and their act, which includes somersaulting, hand and head balancing, and other feats most difficult of accomplishment, is certainly one of the finest on the stage.

Canine intelligence largely developed is seen in the highly-trained troupe of Chihuahua dogs from Mexico exploited by Miss Rosina Caselli. Making their entrance in a miniature motor-car, the tiny canines soon get to work, performing many of the tricks executed by human gymnasts, walking across a narrow stick, balancing themselves on their front legs, turning somersaults, and many other difficult feats. At the conclusion they again all mount their car, and, unaided, drive it off the stage. But a serious breakdown occurs, and one of the smallest of the troupe is seen harnessed to the front of the car, the other jolly dogs all pushing behind, a laughable termination to a most enjoyable act, upon the success of which Miss Caselli is to be congratulated. An entertaining ventriloquial act is that submitted by W. E. Whittle, who represents President Roosevelt on the field of battle. He gives a good imitation of the crying of a very young infant, and the conversation between the ventriloquist and his knee figure is frequently punctuated with laughter. The Four Black Diamonds are vocalists, comedians, and dancers, who secure abundant applause with a well-diversified and smartly-worked act. One of the quartette employs a fine voice in his rendering of "Dinah," and the snatches of song, excellent dancing, and comic business introduced by these drolls all prove most entertaining.

The Zancigs are in the last week of their return engagement at the house where they gained so much renown, and their exhibition is as mystifying and successful as ever. The wonderful electrical effects employed in the divertissement Electra are a source of keen delight to the audience, the brilliant and tastefully-aranged finale calling forth the loudest applause; and the expressive miming and perfect dancing of the principals and the many beautiful stage pictures shown in the grand ballet Queen of Spades should prove an attraction for months to come. Vanola, Mexican antipodist, and the finely-played orchestral selection, "Lucia di Lammermoor," also add to the enjoyment of the audience.

SHEPHERD'S BUSH EMPIRE.

An exceptionally strong programme is attracting crowded houses to this popular house this week, "Standing-room only" being its rule before the curtain rises. A company which includes Victoria Monks, Alice Lloyd, and the McNaughtons must certainly be considered attractive. Victoria Monks contributes a couple of old favourites in "London town" and "Moving day," the choruses of which are taken up by the whole house, and also a new song, entitled "I'm leaving home." The latter is a typical "Victoria Monks" item, and to say that almost sufficeth to convey the fact that it is extremely good. Victoria Monks well deserves her popularity. Alice Lloyd, fresh back from her great success in America, sings "May of Mayfair," a catchy number which we have heard her sing before, and two new songs, "The simple maid" and "Splash me." Miss Lloyd's manner is very neat and dainty, and her songs are always excellent. "The simple maid" is delivered almost as a recitation, and is quite a clever little trifle; whilst "Splash me" is of a more robust type, but almost equally as ingenious. For this last item Miss Lloyd appears in a dainty pink bathing costume, and has a special back-cloth which gives to the song the effect of being sung on a pier. The McNaughtons, whom we are to lose after Christmas (together, of course, with Alice Lloyd) for a period of at least five years, America having proved so attractive, are meeting with their usual great success. No matter how blasé one may feel, the McNaughtons are always so clever and original and genuinely funny that they simply compel laughter. These three items, however, are by no means the only attractions at Shepherd's Bush this week. We have that sterling comedian J. W. Rowley, for whom audiences always seem to feel an affection. Mr. Rowley sings "Paddle your own canoe," sung as an old woman, and winds up with "A shady lane." The Legay Quartette of Parisian dancers contribute an excellent turn; and Ella Dean proves herself the possessor of a charming contralto voice. Charles Whaler and Carrie West appear in a comedy turn entitled "Walk with us," which consists of amusing patter and unusually smart dancing; and Park's Eton Boys provide a most pleasant quart d'teure by some very fine singing. A novelty which is most interesting is E. Rousby's "Around Paris: An Electrical Review of Reviews." The apparatus used is most ingenious, and the colour effects obtained extremely beautiful. The programme is completed by the American Bioscope with a series of pictures entitled "Curing a Jealous Wife." Mention, however, should certainly be made of the excellent orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Henry W. May. The popular Mr. B. G. Maclachan continues as acting-manager, with Mr. Jess Smith as assistant.

THE GRAND, CLAPHAM.

The weather, which may well be said to "top the bill" during the summer months, has this year been exceedingly kind to music-hall managers, and the capital houses that usually congregate at this hall at present show little, if any, signs of falling off. For this week a very interesting programme has been arranged, and is being received with every sign of approval. Mr. Fred Herbert, who is the possessor of a fine voice, which he knows full well how to use, gives a song about John Bull and Britannia, and afterwards sings in capital style "Home, sweet home," his reception being most flattering. A prominent place in the evening's amusement is taken by Mr. George Newburn, the popular mimic, who is giving a series of impersonations of the voices and mannerisms of several of our leading variety artists, including Mark Sheridan, Walter King, Harry Lauder, and George Lashwood in his famous "Latchkey" song. The Sisters Edwards are a couple of dainty comediennes, whose singing and dancing is much admired. The Soisloffs, who are described as cosmopolitan dancers, introduce with considerable effect several novel and clever items, and are liberally rewarded.

Mr. Arthur Woodville, a swell comedian, gives in capital style "Courting" and "I wish I were you." He brings his turn to a conclusion with some neat and clever dancing, and the applause he gets is well earned. Louise Zetland, a charming vocalist, who uses her voice with excellent effect, sings "Just idle dreams" and "Sing me to sleep," and on concluding has many times to come before the curtain to bow her acknowledgments. Gladys Huxley, a charming comedienne, is singing a couple of capital numbers, that entitled "I've a spooney-ooney feeling" being very much to the liking of Claphamites. Mooney and Holbein give a novel and entertaining turn, the gentleman being very funny. Clever dancing is not the least pleasant feature of this turn, and the lady uses her voice with no little effect. They completely succeed in holding the house whilst they are in possession of the stage, and it is some time before the audience will let them go.

Winning a Queen, a spectacular fantasy, is being presented by Gardiner Vincent and company, who are achieving considerable success. The "comedy merchant," who is the life and soul of the whole thing, works throughout with a will that in itself would be sufficient to ensure success, and his efforts to amuse never fail. A pleasant evening's amusement is brought to a conclusion with some interesting pictures on the Bioscope, the series depicting Belgian scenery being followed from start to finish with much interest. The orchestra, who have a new conductor, play well together, and Mr. Harry Ketteman, the energetic manager, does everything possible for the comfort of his patrons. This week he has lost his acting-manager, Mr. P. H. Gallagher, who has left in order to superintend operations at the New Poplar Hippodrome, which, all being well, is to reopen on Monday.

HACKNEY EMPIRE.

The high standard so long sustained at this popular hall is being well maintained this week, for which a very interesting programme is provided. The top of the bill is occupied by Mr. Alec Hurley and company in The Coster's Beano. Needless to say, the popular artist gains a wholehearted welcome on making his appearance, and works hard and with success. Mr. Hurley is provided with three or four good songs, of which, perhaps, the best is a sentimental ditty sung to his girl, and a large number of auxiliaries, together with the assistance of the lady who plays the "donah," enables the trifle to make no uncertain bid for popular approval. The mounting is on a very complete scale, and Mr. Hurley gained a well-merited and enthusiastic call at the close. The other star turn is Mr. Hymack, the "Chameleon Actor." His performance is certainly remarkably clever and mystifying, and the originality of his show certainly deserves the hearty call bestowed upon it.

Another item of distinct interest is the production of a new sketch, entitled Edmund Kean, of which Miss Alicia Ramsay and Rudolf de Cordova are the authors. The motif of the play is concerned with the events in the Green Room of Drury Lane Theatre after the rehearsal of The Merchant of Venice, with which Kean made his first appearance the same evening and scored his histrionic triumph. We are shown the bitter jealousy that animated the members of the "Lane" company at being compelled to support the unknown and insignificant-looking actor from Exeter, who presumed to give them stage directions. The gibes and sneers go on until Kean, worn out and over-wrought with the strain on him, collapses and begs them to be a little merciful if only for the sake of his wife and child, who are starving. This confession astounds and shames the company, who, profuse in apology and eager to atone for their uncharitable behaviour, insist on going through a portion of the play to improve the evening's performance, and forthwith they proceed to rehearse the first scene of the third act, the curtain falling on their toasting of Shylock and his assured triumph. The authors have written a play of great interest, skilfully constructed, with dialogue of a high level. Mr. Frank Cochrane, as Kean, presented an excellent study of the great actor. His make-up was realistic, and his acting, during the rehearsal particularly, merits nothing but praise. Mr. Robert Forsyth, as Barrymore, is also to be congratulated. His portrayal of the splenetic and embittered old actor was of great value to the production. Mr. Leslie Palmer, as Schuler, was good as the bumptious young actor; and Mr. G. Ingleton, as Smedley, played a more sympathetic rôle with success. A very good thumbnail study of the old attendant was submitted by Mr. Charles Booking. Altogether, the play should command complete success.

The Eriks, head-balancers, give a smart and skilful performance that was well received. Haley's Juveniles submit a pretty and attractive turn of song and dance, to which several of the youngsters contribute. Dot and Spot, two very young entertainers, billed as the youngest duettists, render "Life's dream is o'er" very creditably, and gain an enthusiastic call. Jack Pleasants, a comedian, establishes himself a great favourite with his first song, "I'll get cross, Arabella," and his second, "I hadn't been in lodgings before," suits his quaint style admirably. Madge Esmond, a juvenile impersonator, gives a capital portrayal of a public school-boy. Cull Pitt, who submits a turn comprising seight-of-hand character impersonation, gives a good performance; and Cruikshank, the clown, tenders his well-known turn of patter and song with gratifying results. The Bioscope is good, and Mr. Johnston's orchestra is still an agreeable aid to the evening's enjoyment.

ROYAL ALBERT.

Although the week immediately preceding the most popular Bank Holiday of the year might not unreasonably be used as an excuse for "putting anything on," Mr. Arthur T. H. Hunt, at the Royal Albert, does not treat his patrons in that spirit. There is nothing of a makeshift nature in the programme he presents this week, and it would do credit to any six days in the year. Mr. J. Stark and his well-drilled orchestra lead off with a rousing overture, after which the audience settle down to the discussion of the generous menu. From the artistic point of view, perhaps, the best "course" is the well-known episode, The Man in the Street, by Mr. Louis N. Parker. This piece, written as only an author of Mr. Parker's experience could write, with a sense of characterisation that is sometimes wanting in these trifles, may be described as an object-lesson in the art of short pieces. The story of the young artist, wanting a model for his picture, who discovers a "man in the street" playing a flute, and invites him to "sit" for him; the discovery that the poor, drink-sodden wastrel is his wife's father; the braggadocio of the old sport and his departure (on an allowance) so as not to interfere with his daughter's hopes and happiness, is graphically told. The play is charmingly acted by Mr. Nevill Graham and company. Mr. Graham himself gives an artistic portrayal of the broken-down Jabez Gover; Mr. W. Wallace Aston is a fine, manly representative of the young artist, Philip Adan; and Miss Lilian Earle is agreeable as the young wife, Minnie. The mingled comedy and pathos of the play appeal strongly to the audience.

Another sketch of a widely different character is How to be Happy Though Married, performed by F. Wright Aitken and his company. This amusing farce, dealing with a henpecked husband and an overborne wife, affords the four characters ample scope for humorous acting, which is taken advantage of to the full by the two ladies and two gentlemen comprising the cast. Miss Ada Parker, a young, pretty, and talented songstress, sings sweetly, "I love you," followed by another ditty of the "Coon" description and a clever dance. Devon and Earle, American novelty and expert dancers, certainly deserve the applause which greets them, their dancing being wonderfully brisk. A popular turn is that of Master Charlie Carr, a clever juvenile with a pure voice. The boy first sings "I wish I were you" and "Cheyenne," and in both scores a success, while his dancing is exceedingly neat and clever.

The Sisters Allen contribute capital duets and some spirited dancing. The easy, unaffected style and fine voice of Mr. A. E. Clifford make a great impression in "I'm wearing away my heart for you," which is rapturously received. Mr. Ben Jackson soon makes himself a favourite as a banjo-magician and trick soloist. Walter Payne's Bio-Photoscope show some excellent films. Mr. Alfred Levy, the Assistant-Manager and Secretary, is on the alert during the evening, and the stage management of Mr. A. G. Everitt is perfect.

BRITANNIA THEATRE.

A first-class programme is submitted at the Britannia this week, and the principal item of interest is Mr. Arnold Bell's company in that evergreen Irish drama, The Colleen Bawn, submitted by artists of good all-round merit. Mr. Bell himself undertakes the principal character of Myles na Coppaleen, and well does he come through the ordeal of playing this difficult part twice nightly. He is ably supported by Miss Frances Campbell, who plays very charmingly and naturally the part of Eily O'Connor; Mr. Claude Haviland submits a clever performance as Hardress Cregan; the villainous hunchback, Danny Mann, of Mr. J. P. Kennedy is a well-thought-out character study; Kyrle Daly is ably played by Mr. F. C. Robson; and an excellent Father Tom is presented by Mr. A. T. Lennard, who makes an ideal parish priest. Mr. Corrigan is in the capable hands of Mr. Billy Ross; Mesdames Cregan and Sheelah are ably represented by Miss Norah Carome and Miss Lillian Woods; and Anna Chute is capably handled by Miss Violet Campbell. The drama is well mounted and magnificently dressed. Mr. Fred Southern and his capable company, presenting The Private Hotel, cause incessant laughter. Mr. Southern as the burglar who breaks into a private asylum and is persuaded to remain is the means of enabling the audience to indulge in merriment by the predicaments he is forced into in endeavouring to humour the patients in their peculiarities, and certainly deserves the title of "a hundred laughs in twenty minutes." He is well supported by Messrs. Percy Emery, Chas. Ashwell, and Frank Delmere, Miss Sadie Southern, and Miss May Emery. Raymond's Bio-Tableaux throw some amusing and interesting pictures on the screen.

THE FORESTERS'.

Patrons of this cosy establishment are this week enjoying a very interesting programme, the variety shown therein being particularly marked. The item occupying premier position is Mr. Howell Webb's dramatic sketch by Myles Wallerton, entitled Galley Slave. The principal character is Henri Piton (known as the worst man in France), who escapes from prison and takes refuge in the house of Mme. Ducharme. The lady willingly shelters him, owing to the fact that her husband is undergoing imprisonment for a crime of which he is guiltless, and not having the necessary money, the wife is powerless in her efforts to obtain her husband's release. During the conversation that takes place between the convict and the adopted daughter of Madame, he discovers she is his own child, who has been cared for by his benefactor, the husband now in prison. The convict, reflecting on his own evil life, determines, for the sake of the girl, to give himself up, although it means his death, so he instructs Margot, the servant, to give information to the police, and the reward that is offered for him will pay for the release of Ducharme. The police arrive and re-capture him, and his death by shooting concludes a thrilling dramatic incident. The Galley Slave is well played by Mr. Howell Webb, and the character of Margot is capitally sustained by Miss Emily Barton; Miss Magdalen Moore and Little Mabel Rose, as the mother and adopted child, act admirably; Mr. Charles Bennett, as Sergeant Debroche, is all that could be desired.

Mr. Frank Seeley, the eccentric comedian, delights the house with his "Cinderella" song, in which he tells, in some droll patter, how he went to the ball, and concludes with a number in his own well-known style, "I shall never forget the day." Mr. and Mrs. Leonard, in a comedy sketch, Coming Home, are highly amusing, the funny business of Mr. Leonard as the drunken husband, in which he is admirably supported by the lady, causing shrieks of laughter, and at the finale they are rewarded with a well-deserved round of applause. Messrs. Stidder and Dunbar supply a very good musical scena, the antics of the gentleman whilst accompanying the lady on the piano keeping the audience in excellent humour. His speciality is that of playing "Eileen Allanah" on the violin, while in a tableau erected on the stage the lady is shown as the Irish colleen celebrated in the popular ballad.

George Antil, "the eccentric shadow," sings in fine style "I've been over the sea," and his second item, "You have been carrying on," intermixed with some funny business and gags, obtains a worthy reception. Miss Joan Deering plays the violin tastefully, her rendering of "The children's home," dressed as a little waif, being particularly good. The Two Wiltons, song and dance artists, give "I want no other little girl" and a smart military number, "Captain Epha Sapha Sampson," finishing with a neat dance. Learto, with his dog Babs, provides an interesting interlude, the readiness with which the canine executes his duties showing the wonderful care and patience which must have been exercised in his training. He also plays some novel musical instruments. Elton and Elma give a clever exhibition on the triple bar, the eccentricities of the gentleman securing many hearty laughs. Hardie Palm, comedian, sings effectively a "Good-bye" song. Mr Anthony Antil deputised for Hal Chapter, and gave some clever farmyard imitations. Two highly interesting films are given on Raymond's Bio-Tableau, viz., A Victim of Science and Father Buys a Ladder, the farmer being particularly good. Mr. Carl Hamlin is again in charge of the orchestra, which is everything that could be wished. Mr. Cochrane is, as usual, very busy, but none the less genial.

TIVOLI, LIMITED, MEETING.

Mr. Henry Tozer, who presided at the sixteenth annual meeting of the Tivoli (Limited), held at the Tivoli Theatre, Strand, on Thursday, said the year had been remarkably eventful. The exceptionally hot summer it commenced with—which always meant small audiences—was followed by a promising winter season, unfortunately cut short by the strike of January and February. Then in May they had a great misfortune in the untimely death of Mr. George Adney Payne. Notwithstanding adverse circumstances, they were able to present a very satisfactory dividend and exhibit a materially strengthened financial position. Many wild statements were made with reference to the strike, but what had been accomplished by the award was that conditions of employment and engagement had been more clearly defined and systematised, and the conditions of contracts had been made more homogeneous. So far as the Tivoli was concerned, no new disabilities had been imposed, and no increases of wages had been demanded. The Tivoli, though closely surrounded by entertainment competitors, was firmly holding its own, due in some measure to its being allied to the strong organisation which the board's connection with other music halls had enabled them to establish. With regard to the accounts, the balance-sheet showed that the net profit for the twelve months ended on June 30, 1907 (after providing for £5,683 10s. interest on the mortgage and debentures), amounted, with the balance brought forward, to the sum of £14,049 3s. 2d. In January last an interim dividend of £4 per cent. (less income tax) was paid. The directors now recommended the payment of a further dividend of £6 per cent. (less income tax) for the half-year ended June 30, 1907, together with a bonus of 2s. per share (free of income tax), equal to £12 per cent. for the year. The directors proposed to deal with the surplus by applying £5,000 to the General Reserve Fund, making the fund £15,000. Mr. Tozer concluded by moving the adoption of the report and accounts.

Mr. Henry Sutton seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

Mr. H. H. Wells proposed the confirmation and re-election of Mr. Walter Payne as a director, which was seconded by Mr. Hugh Astley, and agreed to unanimously.

An additional sum of 500 guineas was voted to the directors for their services during the past year.

PLYMOUTH STAFF OUTING.

The fourth annual outing of the New Palace Theatre, Plymouth, staff took place on Sunday last, when a party numbering seventy thoroughly enjoyed an excursion to the Cornish Riviera. The trippers, under the charge of Mr. J. Field (manager), embarked in specially-reserved carriages at Millbay Station at 7.40 a.m., and proceeded by G.W.R. to Truro, breakfast being served en route. From Truro the party were conveyed to Malpas in carriages, the drive through the cathedral city and along the banks of the River Fal being exceedingly pleasant. At Malpas the steam-yacht New Resolute awaited the party, and in this the journey was continued to Falmouth. Disembarking at Falmouth Pier, a move was made to the Royal Hotel, where an excellent dinner was served. The party then drove round Pendennis Castle, and thence, vid the coast drive, to Swan Pool. Alighting at the Strand, the return journey was commenced, the River Fal again being negotiated as far as Malpas, where carriages were in waiting for the run to Truro Station. Tea was partaken of on the journey to Liskeard, at which town an hour was agreeably spent, the party finally reaching Plymouth in time to toast the health of the manager. Those responsible for arranging the "annual" were Mr. J. Field (chairman), Mr. S. Kitt (hon. treasurer), Mr. R. W. Grey, and Messrs. R. Clarke and W. Trace. Mr. J. Creber, Mr. R. F. Davis, and Mr. J. Thomas also attended the outing as guests.

THE BARRING CLAUSE.

Mr. Harry Mountford, at Westminster on Monday, sued the Manchester Palace of Varieties for damages for breach of contract. He entered into a contract to appear at the Palace at £22 10s. a week. He was told that the contract did not bar the Tivoli, Manchester, and he appeared there; but afterwards the defendants refused him permission. The defendants admitted the breach of the contract, but asserted that another date was offered plaintiff, who did not accept it. The question, therefore, was one of costs. Mr. Mountford said he could not accept the other date offered him as he had booked an engagement with the Regent, Salford, which barred him from the Palace. Mr. Storey Deans: Don't you know that the Regent and the Palace don't bar each other?—No, certainly not. Why did you not apply to Mr. Turner, of the Regent, for permission?—Well, I never heard of a manager alowing a man to finish up in one hall on the Saturday night and start a fresh engagement in another hall in the same town on the Monday. Mr. F. Gerald (late Secretary of the Variety Artists' Federation) and Mr. C. Butler (Secretary of the Legal Committee) gave evidence as to the custom of the profession with regard to the barring clause. Mr. Wilberforce Turner, manager of the Regent, Salford, said that plaintiff had no contract with him. He admitted certain correspondence relative to an engagement, but said that no contract was binding unless made out on one of the printed forms of contract. Mr. de Frece, of the Palace Theatre, having expressed his willingness to book the plaintiff for Aug. 12, his Honour did not enter judgment, expressing the opinion that plaintiff was entitled to judgment, with costs. The case was adjourned until October before judgment was entered, in order that plaintiff might carry out the engagement.

Mr. Charles Coborn has found a "winner" in the shape of a song upon the tear-compelling subject of "Onions." He produced it for the first time recently at the Empire, Newcastle, when it scored an immediate success. He says that he remembers nothing to equal it in its quick reception by the public since "Two lovely black eyes."

THE METROPOLITAN.

Mr. Harry Nicholls, the popular comedian, elected to make his appearance on the variety boards in a condensed version of The Electric Man, a comedy by Charles Hannam which achieved considerable success at the Royalty and Shaftesbury Theatres in the later part of last year. There was plenty of laughter during the representation of the sketch at the Metropolitan on Monday, mainly the result of the amusing situations which arise out of Walter Everest being mistaken by his friends for the "electric man"—a wonderful animated figure he has made exactly resembling himself. The frequent brief appearances on the scene of the "electric man," and his riotous behaviour "off" also made for merriment, and when the sketch has been still further "cut" and played closer, which is sure to come with repetition, it will be funnier still. Mr. Harry Nicholls repeated his amusing and clever impersonation of Walter Everest and his electric double, and was especially entertaining in his representation of the comic bewilderment of the inventor when mistaken for the figure. The quick changes from one character to another were adroitly managed, and the performance throughout was a most successful one. The support accorded the chief actor was excellent, the lady who impersonated Everest's much-harassed landlady contributing considerably to the merriment of the farce, and the other parts were all capably enacted.

In the variety portion of Mr. Gros's entertaining programme a decided success was made by Marstro and Oretta, a pair of smart equilibrists and jugglers, whose work called forth the loudest of applause. The male of the duo did some exceptionally clever hand-balancing and somersault throwing, and his accomplished lady partner supported a large billiard-table on her body, while Marstro balanced himself on his hands on two billiard balls placed upon a couple of cues. Miss Mary Glenn, Scotch character vocalist, was loudly acclaimed for her fine rendering of "Caller Herrin'" and another popular number. Mr. Edgar Romaine appeared as a smart young motor enthusiast seeking a lady companion, and also gave a catchy ditty concerning "Angeline," "a naughty girl with a baby curl," both songs meeting with evident approval. Miss Lily Langtry, the popular and sprightly comedienne, contributed a couple of amusing songs, the one concerning a "trip upon the ocean" being an especially laughable number; and Mr. Jack Dawe's impersonation of a broken-down swell was decidedly funny. Mr. Walter Wade cut a droll figure as the "Irish octoroon," and evoked merriment with his funny patter, his singing of "Mona" calling forth some of the loudest applause heard during the evening.

Hardeen, the "handcuff king," had apparently little difficulty in releasing himself from a number of pairs of "bracelets" supplied by members of the audience anxious to test his skill, his exhibition throughout proving most interesting. No more attractive or clever dancing turn is to be seen than that given by My Fancy, who was accorded her usual enthusiastic reception; the Merry Maids appeared as five fascinating Dutch girls, and also pleased in their "Buttercup" song and dance; and Miss Esta Stella repeated her dainty "Military maid" song and dance, an item which was loudly applauded. Some pleasing vocalism and violin playing were contributed by a young lady in a "musical sensation," The Magic of Music; and other appreciated items were given by Mr. Russell Brandon, the wonderful dancer; Mr. Tom Leo, comedian; Bugler Carr, equilibrist and musical puzzle; the Jansons, in a most attractive and clever gymnastic act; and Jeapes's animated Graphic.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Randal Wilson.—The White Rose was produced at the Adelphi Theatre on April 23, 1892. Founded on Walter Scott's "Woodstock," by George R. Sims and Robert Buchanan, the play represents Cromwell in a more than usually favourable light. Mr. Charles Cartwright played the Protector, and Mrs. Patrick Campbell gave promise of subsequent triumphs in the part of Elizabeth Cromwell. The rest of the cast was as follows: Colonel Markham Everard, Mr. Leonard Boyne; Colonel Yarborough, Mr. Geo. Cockburn; General Harrison, Mr. R. Davis; Mr. Bletson, Mr. H. Cooper, jun.; Captain Pearson, Mr. Howard Russell; Joseph Tomkins, Mr. Charles Collette; Ezekiel Robins, Mr. F. T. Lingham; Ephraim Wood, Mr. W. Northcote; Habakuk, Mr. E. Saxon; Corporal, Mr. F. Anderson; Charles Stuart, Mr. Fuller Mellish; Sir Harry Lee, Mr. J. D. Beveridge; Albert Lee, Mr. Matthew Brodie; Roger Wildrake, Mr. Charles Dalton; Joliffe, Mr. Arthur Leigh; Jeremiah Holdfast, Mr. Lionel Rignold; Landlord, Mr. H. Cooper; Alice Lee, Miss Evelyn Millard; Phœbe Mayflower, Miss Clara Jecks; Maid at Inn, Miss Alice Bronse; and Milkmaid, Miss Vizetelly.

T. Hopcutt.—The Lyric Theatre, Shaftesbury-avenue, was originally opened by Mr. H. J. Leslie on Dec. 17, 1888 with the opera Dorothy, transferred from the Prince of Wales's.

Vernon H. Ryde.—(1) The Bells was produced at the Lyceum on Nov. 25, 1871. (2) There is every reason to believe that the credit for having first introduced the electric light to the streets of London belongs to the late Mr. John Hollingshead, who in 1878 imported the necessary machinery from Paris, and placed a number of Lontin arc lamps outside the Gaiety Theatre. The generator was lodged in a neighbouring newspaper office and worked by a steam-engine, the wires being carried underground to the theatre. The experiment, which was begun on Aug. 2, lasted for about nine months, and furnished a bold advertisement for the theatre.

H. Rogers.—A Man in a Thousand, by Clarence Burnette, was produced at the Theatre Royal, North Shields, on Aug. 11, 1890. The principal part of Owen Penrose was played by the author, and the rest of the cast consisted of Messrs. Sidney Halling, Gerald Washington, John Cullen, Clark Nicholson, Edward Price, Charles Abbott, G. Goodman, and J. Hammond, and Misses Ellen Cranston, Louise Gilmore, and Lucy Fairleigh, Mrs. Sidney Halling, and little Daisy Halling.

CHELSEA PALACE.

New applicants for public approval were mingled with established favourites in last week's bill at Mr. Henri Gros' fine hall at Chelsea, and large audiences were thoroughly delighted. An early appeal was made with satisfactory results by Mr. Harry Harris, who gives vocal presentments at the piano of Messrs. Alec Hurley, Sam Mayo, and Gus Elen with no little truth to the originals, as well as reproductions of an ocarina and a street organ, which excite admiration. Imitations of a more elaborate description were supplied by Miss Marie Dainton, who, deserting musical comedy for the time, has returned to her old love and to the business which first won her fame. Miss Dainton's personality is in itself delightful, but when she converts it to the representations of various stars of both the dramatic and variety firmaments she is irresistible. Her reproduction of Miss Evie Greene in a song from A Country Girl is superb, and no less admirable is the imitation of Miss Vesta Tilley in "Following in father's footsteps," or the foreshadowing of Miss Connie Ediss on the concert platform rendering "Sing me to sleep." Enthusiastic recalls are the result, and Miss Dainton is fain to respond with a travesty of Miss Marie Lloyd singing "Every morn I bring thee violets."

A clever little comedy incident, called On the Stage, involves the appearance of Counsell and Mills in a coon duet and a mock melodrama which creates unlimited laughter, the "effects" introduced being decidedly novel. The Wynfords make an earnest effort to substantiate their title of "champion jumpers of the world" in a series of leaps over chairs and tables and in all sorts of precarious positions; and atheletic marvels are also found in the Three Braggs, who accomplish numerous head-to-feet balancing feats, in the course of which one man, lying prone on the stage, is raised and maintained in a horizontal position by the heads of his companions.

A comedian of the lighter kind was found in Mr. Fred Lester, who made fun of our American cousins who affect the London on "Fifth Avenue," and of the millionaires' daughters who capture the English earls. A ballad with a tuneful chorus also gives opportunity to Mr. Lester to exercise an admirable voice. Mr. Lloyd Morgan, who recently deputised at Chelsea, renewed his success then made in a couple of well-rendered songs of a topical kind, his "Capital" ditty again provoking enthusiasm. The One Too Many, which had its first production at this hall some years ago, was again presented by Mr. Percy Murray with all the wealth of scenery and the dramatic ability which originally distinguished it; and the programme was also contributed to by Little Alice, comedienne and dancer, and Mr. Ernest Ball, the popular descriptive vocalist. Mr. J. Norman Berlin oversees the entertainment with his customary tact and courtesy, and Mr. Angelo Asher's experienced bâton leads the orchestra successfully through its exacting duties.

THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT
BY ALBERT A. STRONG, LL.B.
Copyright confusion is, like the poor, always with us, and as it seems likely to remain so until at least the crack of doom, it were well for all concerned, or likely to be concerned, to take immediate steps to secure a copy of Mr. Albert A. Strong's new work, entitled "The Law of Copyright." Mr. Strong is already favourably known to the profession for his text-book on "Dramatic and Musical Law," which, like his latest production, is published at "The Era" Office. "The Law of Copyright for Actor and Composer" essays to make clear to the non-legal mind what is—or, in some cases, what probably is—the law as to musical and dramatic copyright. The chapters on the Berne Convention and on the Chase Act, passed by the United States Congress last March, are full of interest.—Referee.

THE ERA

DICKENS AS AN ACTOR.

There was something very appropriate in the opening of the Pickwick Exhibition at the New Dudley Gallery last week by Mr. T. P. O'CONNOR. Mr. O'CONNOR will be greatly remembered by posterity as the author of the "Biography of Lord Beaconsfield," one of the most searching indictments of a leading politician by another which was ever published in the English tongue. But in "Gladstone's House of Commons," and, above all, in the wonderful papers which he contributes weekly to his own paper, Mr. O'CONNOR shows the prime faculty of CHARLES DICKENS—the power of instant and intense vision, and of the reproduction of the exact sensation in print. It was said of DICKENS that when he walked up a street every person he met and every article in the shop-windows were "snapshotted" by his glance; and Mr. O'CONNOR has the same faculty of seeing, remembering, and describing which was the gift of the great novelist.

It is not generally known that CHARLES DICKENS, early in life, thought seriously of going on the stage, and wrote to the stage-manager of Covent Garden Theatre asking for an engagement. "I told him," said DICKENS, "how young I was, and exactly what I thought I could do; that I believed I had a strong perception of character and oddity, and a natural power of reproducing in my own person what I observed in others." For three years he worked at preparing himself for the boards, going to a theatre every night to study acting, and practising for six hours a day, shut up in his own room, or walking in the fields. His first recorded connection with (amateur) theatricals was in 1842, when, on his first visit to America, he took part in some performances at Montreal. The pieces selected were A Roland for an Oliver, Past Two O'Clock in the Morning, and Deaf as a Post. DICKENS all his life was more or less "stage-struck." In 1870, when walking near Westminster Abbey with Mr. CHARLES KENT, he asked his companion, "What do you think would be the realisation of one of my most cherished day-dreams? To settle down for the remainder of my life within easy distance of a great theatre, in the direction of which I should hold supreme authority." In 1847, at an amateur performance at the Haymarket Theatre for the endowment of a perpetual curatorship of SHAKESPEARE'S house at Stratford, DICKENS appeared as Captain Bobadil in BEN JONSON'S Every Man in His Humour, and also as Flexible in KENNEY'S farce of Love, Law, and Physic. He distinguished himself chiefly in the functions of manager and stage-manager, in which he was indefatigable. In connection with the curatorship he played Justice Shallow to MARK LEMON'S Falstaff in The Merry Wives of Windsor. His make-up was so complete that it entirely disguised his identity for several moments after his first entrance; and his simulation of the senility of the character was excellent. His delivery of Bobadil's boastful speech, explaining how he would despatch hundreds of the enemy, was most graphic, DICKENS "rattling the words off while doing an invisible sum of addition in the air, and scoring it conclusively with an invisible line underneath." He was less successful as Lord Wilmot in LYTTON'S comedy Not So Bad as We Seem, which was performed at Devonshire House in 1851 before the Queen and Prince ALBERT. His bearing on the stage, and the tone of his voice, were too hard and rigid for "a young man at the head of the mode," and he dressed the part badly. In Mr. Nightingale's Diary, given on the same occasion, DICKENS appeared in five different characters—Sam Weller; a voluble barrister; a hypochondriac; Mrs. Gamp; and a ninety-years-old sexton; and took part in a vigorous broad-sword combat. But DICKENS'S "great success" was made in some semi-private theatricals at Campden House for the Bournemouth Sanatorium for Consumptives. In these he enacted, in WILKIE COLLINS'S play The Lighthouse, an old man who believes himself to have been the passive accomplice in a murder, and is tormented by his imagination into a confession to his son while they are both imprisoned in the lighthouse by bad weather. DICKENS was able in this part to impress such good judges as HENRY MORLEY and CARLYLE, the latter comparing his weird picturesqueness to the famous figure in NICHOLAS POUSSIN'S "Bacchanalian Dance" in the National Gallery. The rôle was afterwards played by ROBSON at the Olympic. Another triumph was DICKENS'S embodiment of the leading character in COLLINS'S Frozen Deep at DICKENS'S house in 1857, and afterwards at the Gallery of Illustration before the Queen and the Royal Family. Mrs. HENRY COMPTON (Miss Emmeline Montague), one of the best actresses of her day, used to say that, in playing with DICKENS in an amateur performance, she always felt that she had by her side an actor. In his speech at the first anniversary festival of the General Theatrical Fund Association in 1846 DICKENS said: "I tried to recollect, in coming here, whether I had ever been in any theatre in my life from which I had not brought away some pleasant association, however poor the theatre, and I protest, out of my varied experience, I could not remember even one from which I had not brought some favourable impression. . . . The art of the actor excites reflections, sombre or grotesque, awful or humorous, which we are all familiar with. If any man were to tell me that he denied his acknowledgments to the stage, I would simply put to him one question—'Whether he remembered his first play?'"

THE L.C.C. AND AMUSEMENTS.

The London County Council held their last meeting prior to the summer recess at the County Hall, Spring Gardens, on Tuesday, Mr. H. Percy Harris (Chairman) presiding.

GREAT QUEEN-STREET THEATRE.

The Theatres and Music Halls Committee reported that they had considered drawings submitted by Mr. F. W. Foster, showing certain alterations proposed to be made at the Great Queen-street Theatre. The alterations in question consist of the provision of a new stalls buffet; the enlargement of the orchestra; and the re-arrangement of the steps and alteration of the screen doors in the entrance vestibule. The Committee recommended that no objection be offered to the arrangements shown on the drawings submitted by Mr. Foster, provided that certain stated conditions were complied with.

Agreed to.

PROPOSED KILBURN THEATRE OF VARIETIES.

The Theatres Committee reported that the Council on Jan. 22 last approved, subject to certain conditions, drawings submitted by Mr. W. G. R. Sprague, of a music hall proposed to be erected at the junction of Kilburn High-road and Kilburn Priory. In consequence of an alteration which it has been found necessary to make in the line of frontage of the proposed premises, Mr. Sprague had submitted an amended set of drawings, which showed certain slight deviations from the drawings previously approved. The Committee recommended that, provided the works shown on the ten drawings, as altered in red, submitted by Mr. Sprague with regard to the proposed music-hall, be commenced within six months, the Council will be prepared to grant a certificate under Section 12 of 41 and 42 Vict. cap 32, to the owner of such building, on being satisfied that the premises have been completed in accordance with the drawings referred to, and the regulations of the Council, and that certain stated conditions have been complied with.

Adopted.

THE OXFORD.

A recommendation by the Committee that no objection be offered to the arrangements shown on a drawing submitted by Messrs. Wylson and Long, showing certain alterations to the electric intake chamber at the Oxford, subject to the door of the chamber being made self-closing, was also agreed to.

The Council adjourned at 2.15 a.m.

"TIGER CAT."

A Dramatic Sketch, by William Fenton,
Produced at the Middlesex on Monday, July 29.

Jack Neilson .....MR. WM. FELTON
Hans Muller .....MR. FRED DOBELL
Tiger Cat .....MISS WOOLGAR MELLON

The scene in this, Mr. Felton's latest sketch, is, we are told, laid on an ostrich farm sixty miles from Pretoria. Here Hans Muller and Jack Neilson are living in partnership. On the farm is a young female servant, called Tiger Cat, who is frequently ill-treated by Muller. Jack has taught the girl, among other things, to read, and she has grown to love him. He comes into a considerable fortune, and is about to start for England. Tiger, of course, is nearly heartbroken at the thought of separation from him, and she tells him, as they say good-bye, that her mother was an Englishwoman and her father a Boer. Her father ill-treated her mother, who went to live among the Kaffirs, and Tiger was brought up among them. From a picture which the girl shows him Neilson realises that Muller is the girl's father, but does not reveal his belief to her. Neilson subsequently severely criticises Muller for his conduct towards his own daughter. Neilson, at the same time, refuses to enter into further speculations with his partner and departs. The Boer orders Tiger to bring him his rifle and whip, his intention being to follow Neilson and kill him. There is a violent scene between father and daughter, and for the sake of the man she loves Tiger shoots Muller with fatal effect. The report of the firing of the revolver has been heard by Neilson, who returns to see what has happened.

That sound old actor, Mr. Fred Dobell, presents a striking portrayal of the brutal Boer farmer. Miss Woolgar Mellon is seen to considerable advantage in the intensely dramatic and pathetic scenes in the playlet; and Mr. William Felton is to be commended for his characterisation of a vigorous young Englishman.

"HER DEVONSHIRE DAD."

Sketch, in One Scene, by Victor Widdicombe,
Produced at the Canterbury Theatre of Varieties on Monday, July 29.

Mr. Dovey.....MR. VICTOR WIDDICOMBE
Alice .....MISS CLARA RUSSELL
Gerald .....MR. ARTHUR BOWYER

Save for a brief moment of sentiment at the close, laughter is provoked by every line and episode of the above sketch, which on Monday introduced the well-known actor Mr. Victor Widdicombe to the music-hall stage in the capacity of author and actor. The countryman in London is a familiar figure enough, but there is a certain freshness about the old Devonshire farmer, Mr. Dovey, that makes him very welcome. He comes up to London to visit his daughter Alice, and Gerald, her husband, who occupy a flat at Earl's Court and figure in society. The young couple are on the point of going out to dinner at the Carlton Hotel when the old man bursts in upon them attired in coat and trousers which have seen better days. His son-in-law and daughter are horrified when Mr. Dovey insists on accompanying them to dinner, and hasten to cancel the engagement. Learning that it is his appearance that prevents them from taking him with them, the old farmer overwhelms his daughter with reproaches, but disappearing for a few minutes, returns in all the glory of evening dress and declares that he has been "spoofing" them. The author bore the brunt of the piece in the part of the volatile old farmer, and crowded into his impersonation many realistic touches. Though himself a Devonian, Mr. Widdicombe wisely refrained from making the dialect too broad, and the droll lines of the part were rendered with every effect. The scene where the old man takes his daughter to task for being ashamed of her father is very touching, while the line which declares that "If more hands were used for tilling the ground it would be far better for Old England to-day" was cordially endorsed by the audience. The smaller rôles were effectively sustained by Miss Clara Russell, who made a smart and refined Alice; and Mr. Arthur Bowyer, who gave a comic exposition of the foppish young husband. The piece was warmly received, all parts of the house joining in the enthusiasm with which Mr. Widdicombe was recalled.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—I learn that a new sketch, entitled Edmund Kean, has been written by Miss Alicia Ramsay and Mr. Rudolph de Cordova, and is to be produced next week at the Hackney Empire. I wish to state that three months ago I completed a sketch on the same subject and with the same title, which I submitted to several managers.—Yours faithfully, LOUIS COHEN,
Eccentric Club, Piccadilly Circus, W.,
July 26.

DURING the three weeks Miss Julia Neilson was absent from the cast of The Scarlet Pimpernel her part was successfully played by Miss Miriam Lewes.

QUALIFIED CINEMATOGRAPH OPERATORS.

The problem of the unfit has from time immemorial been a thorn in the side both of employer and employed in trades of every description, and now that cinematography has taken such a prominent place among modern industries, the need for some sort of test of efficiency is manifest. By the present process of selection the maker is practically in the hands of the operator, who may or may not be a qualified man, and whose incapability might precipitate a catastrophe of far-reaching effect. To entrust a machine that requires such delicate handling to incompetent hands is to court disaster which would reflect, not only on the maker, but on the place of entertainment where the exhibition was being held, and thus do material injury to his business. Hard and immovable rules and regulations have been framed by the various councils, in the interests of public safety, but the vital point—that of ensuring that the machine shall be worked by a competent man—remains unheeded.

It has been left to the makers themselves to establish the principle, and the past week has witnessed the issue of a handbook by the Kinematograph Manufacturers' Association of Great Britain, which aims at the examination and certification of operators and exhibitors. With the assistance of the Northampton Polytechnic Institute of London and the leading cinematograph exhibitors, the association has outlined a scheme by which their object seems in a fair way of accomplishment. As a result of their labours a practical examination will be held in London at the institute above-mentioned on Oct. 15 next and following days. The examination will be under the control of a committee comprising three leading film manufacturers and three representatives of the institute. They have appointed independent practical examiners, and under their instruction the candidates will fix up and operate a projector under working conditions. Verbal questions will then be put, and the candidates who satisfy the examiners that they are competent will be granted certificates to that effect. Two grades of certificates will be provided, the more advanced of which are recommended to exhibitors and employers of operators.

The advantages to be gained by successful competitors are the entry of their names on a register to be circulated annually among all interested in the engaging of exhibitors or operators, the ability to produce a certificate when soliciting engagements, and the incalculable advancement of their own position and that of the business. The subjects of the examination, as will be seen by the syllabus below, are difficult and comprehensive, and will include the regulations of the London County Council, who, it is anticipated, will eventually recognise the certificate and examination officially. A small fee is to be charged for the examination, the expenses of which will be borne by the association, and for the same fee candidates who require instruction will be admitted to classes at the Northampton Polytechnic Institute.

The joint-committee of the Kinematograph Manufacturers' Association and the Northampton Polytechnic Institute is as follows:—Appointed by the Association: Messrs. A. C. Broomhead (of Gaumont and Co.), Robt. W. Paul (head of the well-known firm of that name, and J. D. Walker (of the Walturdaw Company). Appointed by the Institute: Messrs. D. Buckney, A. B. Kent, J. H. Polak. Examiners for 1907-8: Messrs. Nevil Maskelyne and S. D. Chalmers.

SONGS, WRITERS, AND SINGERS.

AMONG the new songs emanating from Messrs. Francis and Day which have been taken up by the music-sellers with avidity during the week may be mentioned Mr. Tom Costello's great chorus number, by Leigh and Pether, "For Auld Lang Syne," which is No. 327 of the "Sixpenny Pops," and "Under the Lilac Tree" (Miss Lily Burnand) and "Lavender" (Miss Mabel Green), the two latter by Charles Wilmott and Herman E. Darewski, jun. Mr. T. M. Down collaborated with Mr. Wilmott in the "Lilac Tree." The genial Wilmott, according to latest advices, is picnicing at Pevensey and taking his ease at Eastbourne.

MISS CHRISSY BELL, a dainty artist who attracted attention in The Belle of Mayfair, has been doing exceedingly well at the South London with Messrs. Francis and Day's songs, "I want a little man like you" (Kennedy Russell) and "The Fisherman's Daughter" (Wilmott and Darewski, jun.).

IN all likelihood that charming and dainty comedienne, Miss Amy Clevere, will be heard on Monday, in town, in a song entitled "Holding Hands," by Norworth and A. Von Tilzer, which number has been published by Messrs. Francis and Day.

MISS VIOLET STOCKELLE, a sister of Miss Daisy Dormer, will produce at Walthamstow on the 12th inst. a new song of the greatest promise, entitled "Won't you come beneath my parasol?" from the joint pens of J. F. Lambe and T. W. Thurban.

MR. GEORGE LASHWOOD has experimented with quite a number of songs during the past few months, but it has been left to A. J. Mills and Bennett Scott, the writers of his famous "Girl wanted there," to fit him with the biggest comedy number he has exploited for a considerable time. The title of the song is "Oh! the merry widow," and the chorus is irresistible. The Star Co. are the publishers.

MISS CHUMMIE LA MARA is another English artist to make a hit in New York. She had a most flattering reception, and was enthusiastically recalled for her songs, "Sailing in my balloon," "You can't do without a girl," and "Swing me higher, Obadiah," three of the Star Company's publications, going splendidly.

THE success of John Tiller's season, both at New Brighton and Blackpool, is being made with "Yucatan," a Mexican song with a most catchy and lively refrain. This ditty, which is by A. E. Sidney Davis and Sydney Baynes, is published by Messrs. Francis, Day, and Hunter, who anticipate it being sung in a large number of pantomimes.

MISS LILY BURNAND has scored heavily with her new song "Spooning under the lilac tree," for which she has had a special dress and hat designed covered with lilac. The dress, which is very lovely, was made by one of the best Parisian costumiers, and cost nearly £100. The song is by those clever writers, Charles Wilmott and T. Drou, and the music by Hermann E. Darewski, jun. Messrs. Francis, Day, and Hunter will shortly publish this delightful number.

"MR. DONAH."

Sir Leopold Kershaw .....MR. FRANK LESLIE
His Son .....MISS MAUDIE HARRIS
His Butler .....MR. EDWARD DAVY
Sam Dockery .....MR. J. F. BRANDON

This playlet has been adapted from one of Mr. Tom Gallon's stories, and in its dramatised form, and as acted by Mr. J. F. Brandon's company, proves interesting to a high degree. The piece is written around an episode in the life of a man of the lower class—Sam Dockery. To earn an honest living he is obliged to sell cabbages in the street, and whilst earning his daily bread in this manner he is accosted by a youngster, a boy from a much higher sphere of life. The boy hears Sam Dockery refer to his wife as his "donah," and misunderstanding what is intended to be conveyed, accepts the pronoun as the name of the coster, and thereafter calls him "Mr. Donah." The lad gives Mr. Donah an invitation to his father's house to supper, which the coster accepts; and whilst proving that his appetite is of no mean order, suddenly recollects that he has a child at home ill and starving. Filled with a feeling of remorse at having tasted food himself whilst his child is in want, he hurriedly takes his departure. When all is quiet and the youngster is day-dreaming in the chair Mr. Donah returns, with the idea of taking some of the valuables he has seen, but is caught in the act by the boy's father, an elderly gentleman and a member of the Bar. After a touching statement by Mr. Donah explaining why he wished to possess himself of articles which were not his own, he is forgiven by the boy's father, who is a firm believer that "all men are brothers."

Mr. J. F. Brandon as Sam Dockery gave us a really lifelike study of a coster, his portrayal of the rôle being extremely affecting at times. Miss Maudie Harris was sympathetic and boyish as the son of Sir Leopold Kershaw, the latter part being played with dignity and ease by Mr. Frank Leslie. Mr. Edward Davy caused much amusement by his assumption of the absurdly stately butler. Much appreciation was shown at the conclusion of the performance, and the little playlet should prove an interesting and attractive addition to any variety programme.

MISS BERTHA STUART, who is on the Moss Stoll tour, and bottoms the bill this week at the Empire, Edinburgh, opens in London on Monday for an engagement of twenty-three weeks. She will appear shortly at the Tivoli, where she made such an excellent impression on her last visit.

THIS week at the Pavilion Theatre, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Tom Leamore, with funny patter and eccentric characters, scores a great success. With vocal imitations of birds and beasts, Mr. Gilbert Girard gains well-deserved plaudits, whilst Cullen and Carthy, supplemented by Little Cluley, prove very amusing. A sensational "looping the loop" act is given by Le Diabelo; and also creating sensation is the slack-wire performance of Kartelli. Combining comedy with tumbling, the Schiavonis prove quite ingenious. Others meeting with favour are the Floradora Girls, the Stebbings, and Miss Mary Ambrose.

MISS YOUNGE (afterwards Mrs. Pope) was above the middle height, and altogether finely formed about the neck and shoulders; there was a roundness and precision in her speaking, and her manner was commanding, and though her face was not handsome, it was expressive. She was so very successful in her first appearance that her salary was raised, after a night or two of acting, to £3, and at the end of the season to £5, unsolicited! On June 8, 1776, Garrick played Lear; it was the last night but one of his appearing on the stage; the curtain fell in the usual way with his hand locked in Miss Younge's, who played Cordelia. In that way he led her into the green-room, and recollecting that his next performance was to be his last, he said with a sigh, "Oh, Bess! this is the last time of my being your father; you must now look out for someone else to adopt you." "Then, sir," said she, falling upon her knees, "pray give me a father's blessing." Raising her up, he said, "God bless you!" and adding to the performers (who had crowded round them) in a faltering and affectionate tone, "God bless you all!" hurried out of the room. Mrs. Pope used to relate this with great pleasure, but seldom without shedding tears.

VARIETY GOSSIP.

Mr. George Robey has been relating to an interviewer that his first real stage experience after an era of smoking concerts was at the now defunct Aquarium with Kennedy, the mesmerist. George was one of the subjects, and under the "fluence" was supposed to sing comic songs. His real ability as a comedian was discovered, and Mr. Charles Brighton, manager of the Oxford for Mr. Jas. Kirk, paid the coming comedian a salary as a stock turn, and lent him out occasionally. Mr. Robey has two boys, of whom the eldest is exactly like his mother, Miss Ethel Haydon, a former Gaiety girl, the original Favorita in The Circus Girl.

Mr. Harry Hart, who is the oldest living English music hall proprietor, owned a hall at the time of Balaclava, and in turn ran the Raglan, the Montpellier, the Sun, and the Bedford. He it was who originally told the story of a visit to the old Oxford years ago, in the dog days when the heat was terrific. "Where's all your people gone?" said Harry to Manager Jennings, surveying rows of empty seats. "Shooting, I suppose," replied Mr. Jennings. "Well, mine have all gone hopping," was the short but dry comment of the Walworth proprietor.

Mr. Charles Collette, who has concluded a successful engagement in The Bishop's Carriage at the Aldwych Theatre, will commence a month's return visit to the London Pavilion on Monday, when, supported by Miss Joan Derry, he will produce a new sketch by Herbert C. Sargeant.

Mr. Bransby Williams is nearing the end of his Moss and Stoll tour, finishing next week at Birmingham. He has been most successful, having changed his programme nightly, and given two nights a week up to Shakespearean studies. He has also added a study of Othello, which has made an excellent impression. In this Mr. Williams is correctly dressed in less than one minute, and it is considered one of the most powerful studies he has yet presented. He has signed for two more tours with Mr. Stoll. He sails for New York in September, and is giving a week of one-night recitals shortly in the North. Mr. Williams provided a successful high-class recital at Harrogate last Saturday.

The Music Hall Ladies' Guild offices are closed during the month of August. The committee hope to welcome, early in September, the members at the new offices of the Guild, at 2, York-street, Covent Garden. The secretary desires to thank Miss Bertha Graham, Mrs. Swatton, and Miss Lil Hawthorne for parcels of clothing.

Miss Winifred Hare, who will on Monday evening, at the Oxford, again delight Londoners with Bryan Kendis and Paley's "Cheer up, Mary!" had an exciting experience at Johannesburg on the occasion of her recent visit, an experience that vividly recalls Poe's "Murder in the Rue Morgue." The popular lady, at the close of an eminently successful evening at the theatre, had retired for the night, and the weather being extra warm, had left her bedroom window open. She was awakened by a noise, and was horrified to see in the faint light a dark figure at her dressing-table and the reflection of two eyes in the glass that glowed like live coals. In her alarm she called for help, and, sweeping some trinkets from the table, the figure instantly made for the window and disappeared. Aid was quickly forthcoming, and a revolver shot at a dim figure endeavouring to scale a wall brought the police, who captured two men and the trained ape they had employed to rob houses in the vicinity. Upwards of a hundred thefts were proved against the precious pair, who are now in durance vile.

The Terriers' Cricket Club played a match at Freeman's Ground, Champion-hill, on Wednesday, against Jake Friedman's XI. (return match), Hagger knocking up 109, Stebings 79, and Tony Pearson 65. Garbett, Clements, Martin, and D. and Jake Friedman helped to increase the total, the match being eventually won by 62 runs. On Wednesday, at the same grounds, the Terriers will play F. C. Barker's Selbornes, and on Aug. 14 Sammy Salter's Terriers will meet W. Willson Hercules XI. The hon. secretary is awaiting Sam Mayo's return match, if he will fix a date, and offers from others will be attended to. The secretary's address is:—Capt. Ben Woodger, Terriers' Cricket Club, Metropole Hotel, Denmark-hill.

Various inaccurate accounts have been published of the accident by which Hasselmann, the assistant of Miss Ella, the well-known lion-tamer, met his death at Gloucester on Sunday evening. Miss Ella's lions, which have been this week on view at the King's Theatre, Gloucester, are confined in four cages, which stand on the stage facing the auditorium, three containing five magnificent lions and a lioness, and the fourth holding a trio of cubs. The lion Gundar, which was the cause of the death of Hasselmann, is one of the largest and most beautiful of Miss Ella's beasts and the most docile and well-trained lion she possesses, and on more than one occasion he has saved her life, so that whenever she is training a new animal this lion is always in the cage with her. Should she be attacked or threatened, Gundar has always come to her help and acted in the rôle of a protector.

On Sunday evening Hasselmann was left in charge of the lions, and allowed Gundar to pass into the stage dressing-room whilst the other occupant of the same cage was transferred to another cage. The empty cage was then moved to the dressing-room door, which had been closed in the meantime, and, after Hasselmann had entered the room, was pushed close up against it to prevent the lion's escape, whilst Frank Huggins, a theatre assistant, mounted the top of the cage and lifted the iron entrance. Hasselmann got behind the lion and drove him to the entrance of the cage, but he apparently preferred the freedom of the dressing-room, and stood outside the iron bars. The unfortunate man did his best to drive the beast into the cage, and at last picked up a chair and threw it, hoping to frighten the refractory animal into obedience. But beyond smashing the chair the lion took no notice.

Thereupon Hasselmann hurled a second chair, and then the tragedy occurred. Gundar rushed at the assistant, who grappled with him, forcing his arm under its jaw to protect himself from its fury, but the lion struck him to the floor with its paws, and stood over him, having first inflicted terrible injuries to the back of his head and lower part of the body. Miss Ella, who was summoned, fired blank cartridges at the lion without effect, and it was not until the fire-hose was brought to bear that the beast was driven back into the cage. When Mr. Poole, one of the proprietors of the theatre, entered the room he found Hasselmann dead. At the inquest, which was held on Tuesday, the medical evidence showed that death resulted from shock and loss of blood. The jury returned a verdict accordingly, and found that no one was to blame. Hasselmann, like Mrs. Jensen (Miss Ella), is a native of Germany.

The cricket team representing the Palace Theatre continue to pursue their successful career. On Wednesday last the Motor Club eleven met Count Hollander's team at the Grange, Acton. For the winners, who scored 172 runs, Count Hollander made a respectable total of 42, and Mr. P. Houghton 57. For the Motor Club Mr. C. Jarrott scored a capitally played 35, Mr. C. Sanders 19, and Mr. P. Piggot 16.

Messrs. Leonard Mortimer and Maurice Hoffman inform us that the first meeting of the Sketch Managers' Protection Association will take place on Sunday evening at the Hummum's Hotel, Covent-garden, at 7 p.m.

Mr. W. J. Churchill (Uncle Willie) was in evidence at the Llandudno Regatta on the 26th ult., being the donor of a handsome silver cup, valued at eight guineas, for the swimming race confined to the boatmen of Llandudno.

Mr. R. G. Knowles will make his début as a Sunday lecturer at Brighton on Sunday at the New Pier, when he will talk about his trip to South Africa, its occupants, their doings, what they are going to do, and what he (Mr. Knowles) did and saw. The lecture is illustrated by still and moving pictures, most of which have been taken by the lecturer himself.

Mr. Harry Bowerman, the popular manager at the Gaiety, Glasgow, is now on a well-earned holiday, after a very successful season, which was continued right through the summer months. This is the first time this theatre—late the Tivoli—has kept open continuously.

Kyoto, the original one, was recently presented with a beautiful amber and calabash pipe and pouch by the proprietors, Messrs. Beanland, Bath, and Danton, of the Summer Gardens, Bridlington, after his clever speciality in the Palace scene of their burlesque, Cinderella Pantomime.

The new name of the Holbeck Theatre, to be reopened without any formal ceremony as a music hall by Mr. Fred Wood on Monday, is to be the Queen's Theatre and Palace of Varieties. It is a combination of the older Queen's and the later Palace. There will be two shows a night, and the prices will be reduced to 2d., 4d., and 6d. At Christmas it is Mr. Wood's intention to run a pantomime, and after that the building will revert to theatrical purposes for the production of comedies and lighter dramas.

The Jackson Family, the well-known musicians, will shortly take the Circus and Hippodrome, Rochdale. It is intended to pull down the present structure and rebuild a handsome and up-to-date place of amusement.

The friends of Miss Ethel Lonsdale, sister of Lily Lonsdale and Ernie Myers, will be sorry to hear she has been seriously ill at her home in Derby. She is now slowly recovering, and after a few weeks' rest in Southport hopes shortly to resume work.

The Musical Palmers write us to say that the combination at the Prince's Theatre, Llandudno, which came to such an abrupt termination, was not supplied by them, they being engaged the same as the rest of the company. They, however, wish to thank the management for retaining their services to appear, with the Animated Pictures, for the rest of the week. This week the Musical Palmers have been starring at the Crystal Palace Café Chantant, and next Monday open at the Palace, Clacton-on-Sea.

The genial and popular manager of the Summer Gardens at Bridlington, Mr. Charles Beanland, will take his fourth annual benefit on the 9th inst., when there is no doubt the large audience which is certain to assemble will be treated to a very liberal programme.

The Corporation of Brighton has arranged for Mr. Louis Weirter's water-colour impression of "A Matinée at the London Hippodrome" to be shown at their forthcoming autumn exhibition. This picture attracted the notice of the Prince of Wales on the occasion of his visit to the Royal Society of British Artists a short time ago.

The Newcastle Watch Committee having received notice from the local Vigilance Committee that an exhibition of living statuary by the Seldoms was advertised to be seen at the local Pavilion Theatre, the chairman of the Watch Committee, Alderman Goolden, the vice-chairman, and the Chief Constable visited the exhibition on Tuesday afternoon.

At a meeting of the Watch Committee on Wednesday Alderman Morton moved that the committee was of opinion such exhibitions were not desirable, and that a request should be sent to the Town Improvement Committee to take action to prevent any further exhibitions. On a vote being taken the motion was defeated, only four voting in its favour. Councillor Lunn proposed that the committee should take no action in the matter, but that the Chief Constable should be instructed to keep a sharp watch on exhibitions of the kind in future. The chairman declared Mr. Lunn's amendment carried. The subject was afterwards brought before the Town Improvement Committee, but it was agreed, with one dissentient, that the committee should proceed with the next business.

That most amusing sketch, My Statue of Grace, written by Mr. Alfred M. Loader, and played by the Emmett Comedy Company, is making a big reputation in the provinces, and will be seen in London before long. Miss Adele Levey, in the title part, is making a popular success. Her make-up is that of a classical figure with a "wealth" of drapery. Mr. Loader has written a sketch for the Riant Comedy Company, entitled Losing a Tooth, which will be produced at an early date. A number of weeks have been booked for it already. Both these companies have a smart agent in Mr. Will Dalton.

John Lawson is appearing at Stoll's Empire, Stratford, in a répertoire of four sketches, and will reproduce his great illusion sketch, Mr. Todd of London, for Saturday night only. In this Mr. Lawson sustains the dual rôle of Mr. Todd and Vanderdecken—the Man with Blue Heart.

At the Belfast Assizes, on the 24th ult., Michael Elliott, tobacconist and hairdresser, appealed against the decision of the Belfast Recorder dismissing on the merits an action brought by him against the Belfast Royal Hippodrome, Limited, for £19 19s. damages. The action was brought for breach of contract on the part of the company in refusing to permit the appellant to witness the performance at their theatre in Great Victoria-street on June 19. Elliott displayed the Hippodrome bills in his shop window, and in consideration of this received a pass which he used in going in to see the performance. On the evening in question, when proceeding up the stairs at the theatre with his wife to show his pass and go in, he was stopped, and in consequence of what took place he bought two tickets. Before he had time to reach the top of the stairs with his tickets he was ordered to go about his business, and he went out of the building.

For the defendants it was contended that Elliott was under the mistaken idea that his pass entitled him to take two people into the theatre, whereas on the night in question it was only available for one. When this was pointed out to him he threw down the pass, said it was a fraud, and went out. He had never been stopped in going into the theatre, and the 2s. which he had paid for the tickets had been returned to him. His lordship said that was an action for breach of contract. He held there was a contract, that it was broken, and that the plaintiff was entitled to damages. He would give the fullest measure of compensation possible—8s. damages and 7s. 5d. costs.

We are pleased to learn that "My Fancy" has quite recovered from her recent indisposition, and has been charming audiences at the Metropolitan with her novel dancing sensation. By the way, the line "business representative Will Oliver," which got placed in "My Fancy's" advertisement last week, was a printer's error. Of course, it is well known that Harry Bawn is the agent for all of "My Fancy's" engagements.

A meeting of the Shareholders' Investigation Committee of the London Coliseum was held at Cardiff on Wednesday, with Mr. Edward Nicholl in the chair. We understand that Mr. Gillespie, the joint liquidator, attended and explained the scheme of reconstruction. The proposal is to sell all the assets of the company to a syndicate at the price of £193,234, payable £31,000 in cash and the balance by allotment to stockholders of First Debenture Stock to be created by the syndicate of amounts equivalent to those now held by stockholders of the present company, and by the issue of £47,259 Second Debenture Stock of the syndicate to the present second mortgagees. The cash to be paid by the syndicate will be applied in payment of amounts borrowed by the receiver, and any other sums that may be payable in priority to the First Mortgage Debenture Stock. The Investigation Committee discussed these proposals for over an hour, and their decision, which it is understood is very favourable, will be submitted to a meeting of the First Debenture holders on Aug. 7.

Artists who are in town, and who are willing to appear at W. B. Fair's benefit, on Thursday, Sept. 5, at the Holborn Town Hall, are invited to send their names to Alfred Davies, 25, Wellington-street, Strand, who is arranging the event.

Miss Nellie Randall, an exceedingly accomplished comedienne, is giving a good turn at the Queen's, Poplar, this week, where her charming singing and dancing attract much attention, while her handsome costumes are the subject of great admiration.

Miss Florrie Forde is having a most successful tour with four of her finest songs. The management of the Palace and Derby Castle, Douglas, Isle of Man, after her success with them wanted her to return for another two weeks in September, but, owing to bookings, she could not do so.

The Five Whiteleys had a big send-off last Friday from St. Pancras en route for Australia. Amongst those at the station were Mr. E. Dane, Mr., Mrs., and Miss Cleverland, Fred Phillipi, W. E. Voldam, and John Delevanti. The Terriers were represented by William Welsh and Harry Lester, Secretary.

At the Stratford Empire this week Mr. Henry Coutts, with his marvellous lightning change performance, has astonished the audiences, and has won many recalls.

The Snow Family, expert and grotesque skaters, finish to-night a most successful engagement at the London Hippodrome. Owing to previous contracts they are unable to accept Mr. Stoll's offer to remain longer.

Miss Iris Hoey, whose unfortunate misadventure has brought her so prominently into notice, made an appearance on the variety stage at the Palace Theatre on the occasion of the Emily Soldene matinée last November as the heroine of a lurid little sketch by the lamented Jimmy Davis—the last stage work of his that was produced. Mr. Holbrook Blinn was also in the cast.

Mr. Francis O'Flynn's clever banjo playing has been greatly appreciated at the Middlesex this week. He is an accomplished musician, whose style and execution are alike admirable. He opens his little "act" with an inspiring American march, then plays one of Sarasate's favourite violin solos, "Hauser Hungarian Rhapsody," proceeds to give a medley, in which he introduces voice effects, and concludes with a fantasia on "The old folks at home." Altogether, Mr. O'Flynn furnishes a most agreeable entertainment.

Mr. H. E. High, the "Swank comedian" and crazy skater, will open at the Hippodrome on Monday for the run of the Zuyder Zee.

Miss Margaret Ashton brings to a very successful conclusion this week her month's engagement at the Oxford. The popular American soprano, who is appearing at several of the suburban halls prior to her engagement at the Tivoli for September, has been greatly gratified by the reception awarded to her songs—"When Tommy Atkins marries Dolly Gray" and "Don't forget, Mignonette."

Enthusiasm is aroused early in the evening at the London Pavilion, where Graham, "the Human Marionette," is giving his exhilarating entertainment, which he calls "The Music Hall of a Bygone Age." On an elegant minature stage diminutive figures, surmounted by the performer's head, are made to represent old-time favourites at the halls. In front of the orchestra sits the chairman—"good old Rouse"—who plies his hammer energetically and joins vociferously in the chorus. His first announcement is that of "Lord" George Leybourne, and on comes that celebrated personage to sing "Champagne Charlie." Then appear in quick succession the Great Vance, Arthur Lloyd, and Herbert Campbell, in songs associated with their fame.

Comedians who are still happily with us are found in the impersonation of Charles Coborn, in "The man who broke the bank at Monte Carlo," and W. B. Fair, who is presented in his song, "Tommy make room for your uncle." The present generation of music hall lovers will hardly be concerned as to the fidelity of most of the impersonations, but they are well able to compare with the original the imitation of Harry Lauder, in which quite a striking likeness is attained. Though worked on a well-known principle, the show has many novel features, and much laughter is occasioned by its drollery.

Mr. Davis Day's London representative at the halls has been trying lately to emulate the famous bird of Sir Boyle Roche. Within the span almost of a few hours he was seen talking to his old friend and adviser, Fred Williams, at Clacton; was observed gazing with a wistful eye (and without his rod) at the high tide at Hastings; was taken to task with mock indignation by Fred Herbert on the Britannia Pier, Great Yarmouth, and accused of "shadowing" the burly topical vocalist; was "discovered" by Edgar Curtis in the rear of the bandstand concert outside the Granville at Ramsgate; was overheard discoursing on nomenclature in Charing Cross-road; and was late at night at the Metropolitan seen discussing with George Barclay a forthcoming song of the "Liza Johnson" class for Miss Kate Carney.

Her Majesty the Queen honoured the Palace Theatre with a visit on Saturday evening, and was accompanied by H.R.H. The Prince of Wales, Princess Victoria, and the Duke of Sparta. The Royal party arrived quite early and remained until the conclusion of the Bioscope programme, and appeared much interested in the picture depicting their Majesties' visit to the Dublin Exhibition. This is the second occasion on which the Queen has honoured the Palace with a visit under the present management.

The Bank Holiday bill at the Tivoli will include Harry Lauder, with a new song, entitled "Rob Roy McIntosh"; Dr. Angelo's living representation of porcelains; Wilkie Bard, Alice Pierce, Harry Tate, Clarice Mayne, Will Evans, The Griffiths Bros., Duncan and Godfrey, and Herbert La Martine.

The holiday bill at the Canterbury will include Little Tich, Miss Winifred Hare, the Morton Comedy Trio, Flo Challis, Dave Carter, (Irish tenor), Harry Tate in Motoring, Ruffell's Imperial Bioscope, Harry Champion, Charles Fanning, Alice Pierce, Kelly, Gillette, and Bart, the Four Eugenes, the Melroses, Major Newell, the Great Northen Troupe, and Cinquevalli.

A most charming little operetta-scena was produced on Monday last at the Paragon, entitled Adrienne, an episode in the life of Napoleon. Napoleon acts as benefactor to a lady and her child, who are practically starving, the husband having deserted them. The wife becomes the pet of the Emperor, who vows he loves her better than his Josephine. He also expresses his admiration for her in two songs, capitally sung, entitled "Once" and "In the hush of the summer time." The husband unexpectedly returns, much to the sorrow of the wife, and obtains the information that the lovers are going to a ball together. The husband decides to shoot the Emperor at the meeting-place of the pair, but the wife unfortunately arrives first, and, wearing a black domino over her ball dress, is mistaken for the proposed victim and killed in his stead. Mme. Mellor as the wife acted admirably throughout, and the characters of Napoleon and the husband were well sustained.

The following artists will be found in the August Bank Holiday programme at the Royal Standard Theatre of Varieties:—The Gothams, Ernest Montefiore and company in The Little Colonel, Geo. d'Albert, Sinclair's Four Radiums, Hallam and Stanton in A Broken Journey, Nipper Lupino Lane, Cullane Trio in The Ladies' School, Dene and Dawson in Stage Aspirants, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Leonard in Coming Home, Harry Martell, Sterling and Wright, Minnie Kirby, Cotton and Sands, David Davis, Sisters Le Fleur, and Mollie Devon.

At the Metropolitan Music Hall, on the 12th inst., will be produced an entirely novel sketch, entitled A Japanese Revenge, by Cecil Newton, adapted from a short story by Sir A. Conan Doyle, which Sir Arthur kindly gave Mr. Newton permission to prepare for the stage. The company is under the direction of Mr. Ferdinand Conti, and includes Mr. J. Nelson Ramsay and Mr. Cecil Newton. Special music has been written by Mr. W. H. Hewlett, the composer of "Pan and the young shepherd."

The Chelsea Palace of Varieties bill for Bank Holiday includes the name of Florence St. John and company in Quits, Rauschle, Carlotta Levey, C. Emlyn Jones in The Daughters of Britain, Clarice Mayne, Henri Bekker, Jeapes' Animated Graphic, G. H. Chirgwin, and Daisy Stratton.

The Bank Holiday bill at the Metropolitan includes Mr. John F. Preston with his company in Rogues of the Turf, Lily Flexmore, the Delomes, Annie Laurie, Jeapes' Graphic, Millie Hylton, Leo Dryden, Clarice Mayne, C. St. John Denton and Geo. Rowland's company of juveniles in The Punch and Judy Girl, Dan Crawley, Emlyn Jones Quintette, Major Newell, Edie Veno, Tatten Hall, Anthony, and Jack and Evelyn, the popular comedy duo, in their funny incident, Come into the Office.

"The Unwritten Law," produced by John Lawson last May at the Holborn Empire, will be presented at the Collins's on Monday. The cast is of exceptional strength, including Mr. Arthur Royston as the Empire Builder; Cecil du Gue as the Diamond Digger; Mr. Richard Bosco as the Bad Boy; and Miss Buena Bent as the Country Girl. In the first scene Miss Bent will introduce a special dance. The Café Chantant will be one of the biggest sets seen for some time on the music hall stage.

At Westminster, on the 26th ult., Austin Millais, a music-hall artist, proprietor of a show called "Venus," sued Mr. Elliston, of the Bolton Theatre of Varieties, for breach of contract. The plaintiff signed a contract for £20 a week to appear at the Bolton Theatre of Varieties on May 24 last. He was subsequently told that he could not appear, as the performance was objected to by the public authorities. When the contract was cancelled he offered to do a "turn" called The Stolen Duchess, which was refused.

Cross-examined by Mr. Collins, plaintiff maintained his performance could not be called "living statuary." Did not your contract say "statuary"?—Yes. Did you ever intend to exclude statuary?—Well, I should say yes. Is not "Venus" a nude act?—No. Has the lady ever played statuary?—Yes. Do you say that a person with a coating of paint is not nude?—Well, it all depends. Judge Woodfall: What distinction do you draw between a nude living picture and a living statue?—Well, one poses on a coloured background, with coloured paint or enamel and sometimes drapery, while the statuary is white and quite nude.

In cross-examination the plaintiff stated that "Venus" gave representations of "The Bath of Psyche," Canova's "Venus," "Venus of the Mirror," "The Sleeping Venus," "The Message of Love," "The Acceptance," &c. Mr. Goodson, of Day's Agency, said that the performance consisted of a lady covered with pink enamel giving representations of the pictures and statues mentioned. Mr. Elliston, the managing-director of the Bolton Theatre of Varieties, said he understood the "turn" was "à la Milo, nude figures." The turn was billed extensively, and, as a result, he received communications from the Mayor of Bolton and the chief constable, and he had to cancel the contract. His Honour, in giving judgment, said for the defendant to escape from his legal liability he must show that the public authorities had objected to the performances. But there was no such evidence before him, and he found for plaintiff, with costs.

On and after Monday the admissions to the Alhambra Theatre Gallery and Amphitheatre will be restored to their former prices: 6d. to the Gallery and 1s. to the Amphitheatre.

Miss Louise Higham, daughter of Mr. Fred Higham, the well-known variety agent, was married on Saturday morning at St. Michael's Church, Stockwell, to Captain Leonard Maxwell Taunton, of Brighton.

Mr. George Lashwood will conclude this evening ten-week engagement with Mr. Oswald Stoll. Mr. Lashwood has occupied the stage for forty minutes at each performance, and has made a great success. He will cross the Channel on Sunday, and will then motor through France and Switzerland, returning in about three weeks, and commencing on the Stoll tour early in September. His engagement will last until Christmas, when he will appear in the pantomime at the Shakespeare Theatre, Liverpool, with a capital budget of songs.

Miss Dolly Harmer made such a hit on her opening night in Cape Town that her engagement has been prolonged.

Mme. Natalia, who is again drawing good houses at the Royal Standard Theatre, Victoria, this week, is undoubtedly entitled to claim premier honours in England as a contralto vocalist. Her rendering of "Lead thou me on," "Lovely spring," and her pièce de résistance, the scena, "Love's Rosery," are especially worthy of mention, and the management must be congratulated for having secured her valuable services.

Miss Annie Laurie was so successful in Australia that she was re-engaged for a second term of eight weeks, making twenty-four in all. She played fourteen consecutive weeks at Sydney. This lady opens at the Metropolitan and Islington on Monday, through the agency of Mr. Tom Pacey.

The Prince's, Poplar, is closed this week for alterations and renovation, preparatory to reopening under the title of the Poplar Hippodrome, on August Bank Holiday, with a twice-nightly variety programme.

A contributor writing in the Royal Magazine over the pseudonym "Tights," in some interesting reminiscences speaks of Lulu, the gymnast, as a girl. In making this statement he falls into error, as it is well known that Farini, who brought out Lulu, thought it astute showmanship to proclaim the boy a girl, and thereby give an increased value to the intrepidity and skill of what was then regarded as an extraordinary performance.

Mrs. John Lawson, by special request, will be playing The Devil's Sunday at the Palace, Camberwell, and Sally in Our Alley at the Hippodrome, Crouch End, Monday next. This talented lady will produce a new episode in London at the end of September.

A reception was held at Zimmer's Café, Third Avenue, New York, on the 22nd ult., in honour of Miss Chummie La Mara, who had just made such a success at Tony Pastor's Theatre. The chair was taken by J. Donegan, of the Dunedin Troupe, supported by Mrs. Donegan, Chummie La Mara, Will Sergeant, A. J. Bernhardt, and a host of friends from the Teutonic. Healths and toasts were given, and a very enjoyable time was spent.

The programme at the London Hippodrome will be strengthened for Bank Holiday week by Salerno, the famous juggler; Lockhart's elephants, and the Macarte Sisters in a new musical scena, The Land of the Lotus. The final week's stay of Albert Toft's statuary is also announced. The skating carnival, Zuyder Zee, the fourteen Black Hussars, the Globe of Life, Clown Pinta and his military geese, and the four Magnanis, the most extraordinary barbers in the world, are still retained.

Miss Daisy James has made her first appearance at the Opera House, Philadelphia, and has scored an unqualified success. She is, says the North American, "a winsome and graceful comedienne, with great daintiness of person and manner," and won the entire appreciation of the audience. Miss James was kept singing until compelled to beg the audience to give her time to prepare more songs. She will be retained for as long as her engagement in England will permit, and will return to New York later.

Mr. J. W. Winton will sail for America per the Adriatic on the 27th ult., to fulfil a twenty-five weeks' engagement with Messrs. Klaw and Erlanger. Mr. Winton will return to England in April to carry out engagements cancelled in this country, including a season at the Alhambra.

The holiday programme of the Empire Theatre will include Mr. Fred Emney, Mr. Harry Grattan and company, in their clever and delightfully humorous sketch, Man, the Brute. This sketch has been played with invariable success during the past few weeks, and will now form one of the principal features of the Empire programme. Maceo and Fox, two very clever nigger singers and dancers; and Botello and Virginia, the acrobats, are also added to the programme. A new biograph picture at the Empire shows how a car is built. The various parts of the car are brought on in their crude state, are fitted together, and in a few moments the motor is careering on its way down the road.

Mr. Henry Coutts produced on Monday, at the Stratford Empire, a sketch entitled Outflanked, which proved of considerable interest by reason of the amazingly rapid changes of dress and make-up assumed by Mr. Coutts. First he appears in regimentals as Sergeant Tom Willoughby, makes love to a barmaid, and, when her back is turned, effects an instantaneous metamorphose to "Claude Duval off to a ball." Sergeant Willoughby having gone away without paying for his drink, the barmaid, of course, is somewhat perturbed. "Claude Duval" has some liquid refreshment, and then he disappears quite as suddenly as the gay and gallant sergeant. "Weary Willie, the would-be toff," takes his place, chats with the girl, plays the same trick on her—exit Weary Willie, enter Sandy Macpherson. Similarly exit Macpherson, enter Sarah Blobbs; enter "Miss Birdie Gusher, of eighteen summers," exit; re-enter Sergeant Willoughby, who makes known to the barmaid his impostures, and pays up. Mr. Coutts acted in characteristic fashion in each of his different rôles, and he was ably supported by Miss Dot Kemp as the barmaid and Mr. Louis du Cane as a Captain Giles. The trifle was exceedingly well received.

At Marylebone Police Court on the 26th ult. Mrs. Marie Allen applied to Mr. Paul Taylor to assist her in tracing her husband, Harry Allen, for over ten years sergeant-attendant at the Metropolitan Theatre of Varieties, who has been missing since the 12th ult. On the morning of that day they visited a friend at Ewell. On returning to London, he ran away from her in Ranelagh Road, and from that time she had seen nothing of him, receiving from him, however, an extraordinary letter. Mrs. Allen gives the following description of her husband: Height, 5ft. 10in.; very stout; age forty-one, but looks older; very fresh complexion, high forehead, double chin, thick, tawny moustache, brown eyes, and a scar on the right cheek nearly an inch long. He was wearing a new dark grey suit with a faint strip, black bowler hat, stand-up-turn-down collar, black tie, and brown boots.

The Rev. T. Horne's Visit to Yorkshire.

In accordance with a promise given to the Yorkshire showmen at the annual meetings in Manchester and London, the organising chaplain will visit two of the most important Bank Holiday fairs in Yorkshire. He hopes to be able to address the showmen at Hunslet Feast, Leeds, in the afternoon of to-morrow (Sunday), and in the evening of the same day to address the showpeople on the feast ground, Manningham, Bradford. He proposes to speak at both gatherings on the objects and work of the Showmen's Guild, and he sincerely trusts that the members of the committee in Yorkshire and all friends of the show business will rally round him in this effort of his to arouse interest in the trade-protection work of the Guild.

Shipley Feast.

At this first class fixture on the Yorkshire round there were four big cinematograph shows, the concerns of Messrs. Tuby, Monte Bros., Relph and Pedley, and Howden. Amongst the sideshows was C. Relph's freak museum. The motor-cars, ostriches, steam yachts, and steam swings were those of Messrs. Tuby, Marshall, Redfern, Waddington, and Corrigan; big boats and park swings by Messrs. Fisher, Redfern, Cooper, and Hughes; slipping-the-slope towers by Houldsworth and Corrigan. The other novelties were shooting concerns by Richards, Ratcliff, Burgess, Barker, Illingworth, and Whatmore; and throwing games and other varieties by Doubtfire, Sutherland, Hyde, Walker, Houldsworth Bros., Whatmore, Webb, Ratcliff, Holt, and other caterers.

Bilston Wakes.

King's Visit to Mr. de Rothschild.

The News of the World says that the King paid a flying visit to Halton House, Mr. Alfred de Rothschild's residence in Bucks. One of the most interesting things King Edward saw there was the private circus which Mr. de Rothschild has lately established at Halton. A path from one of the lawns leads into a circle hidden from the general view by a thick wall of firs and greenery. An inner circle is railed off and fitted with all the trappings of a first-class circus and a miniature steeplechase combined. In the centre and all around are tall electric lights, which throw a light equal to day when night performances are required. But it was the animals, whose acrobatic skill is almost human, that interested the King most. There are eight ponies, smaller than Shetlands, two gazelles, a donkey, and two small dogs, one of which—a fox terrier—is equally accomplished as a jockey and an acrobat. The King spent a considerable part of the afternoon examining the animals, watching their capers, and noting with satisfaction, which he did not hesitate to express, the comfort of their villa residences at the back of the circus.

We regret to record that Mrs. Bastable, daughter of the late Mrs. Reader, of "Buff Bill" fame, died at Folkestone on the 29th ult. The deceased lady was interred at the local cemetery.

THE FIGHT FOR MITCHAM FAIR.

We regret to inform our readers that, despite the manifest wish of the people of Mitcham to retain their ancient charter fair, that the Board of Conservators for Mitcham Common Lands will not afford facilities to the people whose interests they elected to serve, in the face of the public opinion and the awakened interest in the people's rights that recent events have so plainly demonstrated. The conservators as a body, like the Bourbon Kings of France, "Never learn, never change."

The Flouting of Public Opinion.

Public meeting after public meeting has been held. The People's Rights League, led by Councillors Dant and Baker, have constitutionally voiced and interpreted the will of the people, yet the conservators refuse the express wishes of their constituents. The parish council is ready to accept the declared will of the people, but not so the conservators. With them it still remains the interests of the few and not the interests of the many. We venture to remind these "Bourbons of Mitcham" that the will of the people shall prevail, and that one by one these despots shall be pulled down from their throne. When public servants arrogate mastership over the people, then we have the beginning of the end. Though "The mills of God grind slowly,

They grind exceeding small."

We have no doubt as to the ultimate issue of the struggle. If the conservators will not change, the people will change the conservators. Then shall right prevail against might, and the people come into their inheritance.

The Showmen and the Coming Fair.

For the past two months the organised showmen have laboured for a peaceful and a practical termination of the question at issue between them and the conservators, and although the last word is that the conservators refuse facilities, we are not even yet at the very last word. Nor are the "resources of civilisation" helpless in the matter. There is still the open door, but the conservators do not hold the key of that door; the conservators have shut their own doors for the present. Now the showmen turn to the owners of the fair rights—that is to say, the marketable property—the right of the Lord of the Manor or his assignee to draw tolls on the fair green for the days of the fair.

Who Owns the Fair Rights?

As disclosed in the statement of claim of the plaintiffs in the High Court action for trespass against Messrs. Ball, Hill, and Wilson, certain gentlemen purchased the franchise of the fair. These gentlemen purchased these valuable trading rights from the widow of the late owner, Charles Bailey, of show fame. It has complicated the issue extremely that these men were at the moment of purchase not only conservators, but in the case of two of them members of Mitcham Parish Council, the third being the vestry clerk, and the fourth, at the time of purchase, an alderman of the Surrey County Council. If the issues were not so serious to the parties interested it would be a fit theme for the satirical humour of Sir W. S. Gilbert. We give one example of the topsy-turveydom of Mitcham public life. This is true to fact. Mr. Blank is a parish councillor; he is also a conservator, and, more yet, for he is a joint owner of the fair franchise. Now see how it works. As councillor he petitions himself, as conservator, to try and abolish the fair. As a conservator he cannot do it without the consent of himself as owner of the franchise. So Mr. Blank acts in all these three capacities, and the Home Secretary is asked to abolish the fair because Parish Councillor Blank, Conservator Blank, and Franchise Owner Blank are all agreed, and therefore away with the fair.

Some Serious Considerations.

It has long been a rule of public life that no man having a monetary interest in questions before a public body shall take any part in the settlement of any matters in which they are so implicated. Why have the owners of the fair franchise taken part in the abolition movement? Who instructed the owners of the franchise to purchase the rights, and for what end and purpose? Why do these gentlemen still hold the franchise, and why do they not pass it over to the parish council? These are questions that will have to be answered, and all the devious methods of these abolitionists must come out into the light. They must not impose their will upon the people. The time has come to clear up all this uncertainty. The people are certain in their demand; they want the fair; they want it removed to a better site if they can get it; but if not, they want such a fair as they can get on the old fair green.

In view of the new date of this year's fair the Showmen's Guild sent the following proposal to the conservators, after full consideration in committee:—

The Guild's Proposals.

July 19, 1907.

TO THE CONSERVATORS OF MITCHAM COMMON LANDS.

Gentlemen,—The Executive Council of the above society desire, in continuance of their former communications to you re Mitcham Fair, to submit the following additional points for your consideration:—

1. That in view of the plébiscite of the electors on the question of the retention of the fair and its possible removal to a more suitable site on lands under your control, or that of the parish council, by arrangement with you, that it would be advisable to make provision for the ensuing fair—Aug. 12 and the two following days.

2. The Showmen's Guild will undertake, if the conservators so desire, the entire management and control of the fair and the entertainments, that all necessary guarantees may be given to you as regards the conduct of the fair.

3. This society, acting for the organised showmen, will undertake to accept the vote of the electors, and, in the event of that vote being adverse to the retention of the fair, will co-operate with the conservators in carrying out the will of the people.

4. We ask and recognise that it would be a favour on your part to grant us for the ensuing year the use of that portion of the common known as the Three Kings. We also admit that in granting us this favour for this year only that the concession is without prejudice to your rights to withdraw the same, and we also will accept, in the present emergency, any other site suitable for our purpose under your control.

Soliciting the favour of a speedy reply,
I beg to remain,
Your obedient servant,
T. HORNE
(for the Executive Council).

The Conservators' Reply.

A meeting of the conservators ought to have taken place on the 20th, but it was postponed until the 27th, and it reads as follows, the reply being sent by Mr. Foss, who has shown every possible courtesy to the Guild in the matter all through the negotiations:—

MITCHAM FAIR.

Dear Mr. Horne,—The meeting of the conservators was held on Saturday afternoon, but I was unable to write in regard to it that day. The conservators went very carefully into the matter, but they have no power under their scheme to transfer the fair franchise from the fair green to any other quarter, as they thereby would be infringing the rights of several other parties, who would be able to complain if the suggested site were used for fair purposes. They therefore are compelled to refuse to allow the ground at the Three Kings Pond to be used, and they must adhere to their old course of action, viz., to do their best to prevent persons unauthorised by the owners of the franchise from occupying sites on the fair green without arrangement with them and without payment. Yours very truly,
F. FOSS.

The Guild Chaplain's Answer.

Dear Mr. Foss,—I am much obliged to you for the trouble you have taken in the matter that has brought us together. I can quite appreciate the difficulties that have influenced the conservators in their decision. I know (and have always acted within that knowledge) that to remove a fair is as difficult (technically) as to abolish one. The difference in the case of Mitcham is this—that the people want removal, the showmen want removal, and the Home Office will regard with favourable mind any proposal for that solution of the trouble.

Now comes my suggestion to the owners of the franchise (I understand that you are one of them). Use your legal right to hold the fair on the fair green for this year pending other arrangements. Ask the Guild to make you an offer for the available sites. We will give every possible assistance, and all guarantee for good shows, &c. I suggest a scale of tolls like the L.C.C., or, if you like it better, the tolls as collected by the late Frank Bailey. What think you?

Yours ever, for God and good,
T. HORNE,—

July 30, 1907.

The Reply of the Franchise Owners.

Dear Mr. Horne,—I have your letter of the 30th inst. The owners of the franchise are particularly anxious not to use their legal right to hold the fair, and they all of them feel that the Fair Green is unsafe and unsuitable for the fair. It would be impossible for them to come to any arrangement for letting their rights, and I am afraid that it will be necessary for the Conservators to take the same steps as heretofore, which, of course, I regret very much.—Yours truly, FREDK. FOSS.

The Rev. T. Horne, the Showman's Guild,

Railway Rates.

In the special article dealing with this subject upon general lines last week there were several points of great concern and value to showmen that we did not touch upon. For instance, taking the very safe estimate of the money spent by showmen with the various companies at £100,000 per annum, the immediate saving to fairground traders amounts to £25,000. The organised showmen had every right to be alarmed at the astounding nature of a proposed scale of charges that would have increased the cost of the transit of their goods £50,000 per annum. They had every reason and justice on their side when they approached the railway companies and asked for a reconsideration of the exorbitant proposals. Showmen were justified in pointing out, as business men, that their trade could not possibly stand the strain of so great an increase in working expenses. They were justified in warning the railway companies that the important industry of the fairground would not submit to be crushed out of existence by such exorbitant charges as the first proposals of the railways indicated. Mr. George Green, in his able statement of the showmen's case at the Railway Clearing House, Euston, and again in the circular issued by the organised showmen to the traffic-managers, pointing out that the showmen, in the event of the railways not acceding to the moderate demands of their customers for a more reasonable tariff, would be obliged to take their concerns by traction engine or by Renard Road Train from fair to fair, undoubtedly carried conviction.

Other Large Interests Involved.

"The Era" from time to time has clearly set out the tremendous importance and yearly increasing value of the holiday resorts and pleasure passenger traffic that the show business has created, fosters, and protects. That great fairs like Nottingham, Hull, Peterborough, Oxford, Exeter, and other towns, with their hundreds of thousands of passengers either going to the fair or availing themselves of the holiday created by the fair to go to the seaside, testifies to the immense value of the volume of trade that the fairs bring to the railway companies. We ventured last week to congratulate the combined railway companies on the amicable arrangement they have effected with their showmen customers by their adoption of the Scotch rates on English lines. We are justified also in urging the showmen to still further strengthen and perfect their trade organisations. The brilliant victories of the Showmen's Guild in Parliamentary defence work, the public propaganda for the preservation of the people's fairs, and the equally successful work of the Roundabout Proprietors and Showmen's Union in dealing with corporations and with the railway companies demonstrates beyond all doubt and cavil the paramount necessity of continued support to their trade societies. We sincerely hope that the day is not far distant when the separate organisations will be either effectively consolidated or amalgamated, that the burden of financial responsibility will be readily and intelligently borne by all the traders great and small who earn their livelihood on the fairground.

South Wales Notes.

Stoll's Panoptican, at Cardiff, has a very attractive programme, several new pictures being shown. Mme. D'Arc's waxworks has a number of new features added. Tenby had delightful weather for the summer fair. Messrs. Hy. Studt and Son supplied the chief attraction, their new motors being well patronised. Pontypridd has an attractive holiday programme. Messrs. Wadbrooke and Dooner, of bioscope fame, are advertised with entirely new numbers.

Mountain Ash will be visited by Messrs. Crecraft, who promise a good bill of fare. Merthyr Vale has Mr. Haggar, jun., who has paid a successful visit in the district. Mr. E. Danter's new bioscope has been in the Monmouthshire district, with gratifying results. Messrs. Ford's galaxy of amusement are on a visit at Pontypridd.

Barry Dock still has the popular Mr. John Johnson. Several novelties are promised for the holidays. Brynmaur retains Messrs. Johnson, of Prince of Wales fame, who give some very attractive performances, which draw good audiences. At Penarth Mr. Ted Ebley is on a short visit, and is meeting with deserved success.

Bramley Feast.

Here the entertainers were:—Tuby and Sons, with their cinematograph theatre; J. Crighton's cinematograph; Professor Gibson's occult show; Blakey's freak show; Laing's fine art gallery; motors, gallopers, flying motors, steam yachts, big boats, helter-skelters, and park swings by Messrs. J. W. Waddington, Redfearn, Cooper, Morley, Brooks, Hughes, and Corrigan; shooters, varieties and throwing games by Jameson, Radcliffe, Hughes, Hogg, Illingworth, Brookes, Webb, Wilden, Lewis Cooper, Walker, Hides, Crowther, and numerous other caterers.

Friends of Mr. Fred Lewis, late acting-manager with Mr. John Henry Cooke, will be sorry to hear that he has met with a serious accident. Mr. Lewis, who is at present touring Ireland with Buff Bill's Circus and Menagerie from America, received a severe kick from his horse which completely crippled him. In spite of intense pain, Mr. Lewis stuck to his post, and, notwithstanding the protests of his doctor, insisted, with characteristic pluck, in attending to his duties. It is gratifying to know that Mr. Lewis is now making progress towards recovery.

LONGSIGHT WAKES.

Manchester began this week its splendid circuit of Midsummer fairs. Longsight, fifty years ago, was a small village of a few hundred people on the high road between Stockport and Manchester. The fair was held in the one long, straggling street that formed the village. Longsight is now a thriving suburb of the great city of Manchester, and has an immediate population of 60,000, and a quarter of a million more people within a penny electric car ride—hence its business importance in the world of shows. This year there were two fair-grounds, but in such close proximity that for all business purposes they were one immense pleasure fair.

John Whiting, who for many years past has been the sole provider of the wakes, was this years supplemented by the enterprise of John Collins, upon whose new wakes ground the chief show and machine novelties were displayed. Owing to the rapid growth of the suburb as a residential district, the wakes ground used for some years past is now being covered by villa residences. Mr. John Whiting was driven this year into a much smaller and less suitable portion of open land on the same estate, just outside the building line. This pitch did not lend itself to the adequate display of many large concerns, and the wet weather was also a serious drawback, as Mr. Whiting's ground was in a hollow. The weather materially affected both grounds, yet on the whole the attendance of the public was larger than ever, and fairly good business was done.

John Whiting's Ground.

The chief attraction here was the veteran lessee's superb electric machine, the Japanese cars from Tokio, a show novelty so up-to-date and perfect in every detail, both mechanical and artistic, that it easily maintains a premier position in public patronage. Next in order of merit came Wm. Mitchell's racing cockerels, a high-class and popular machine novelty.

Florence's Circus.

This new and bright bijou circus is a decided acquisition to our popular fairs. The proprietress, Miss Florence, is the daughter of the world-famous "Felix, the musical clown," one of the patriarchs of the arena, and who, still hale and hearty after well nigh eighty years of a busy cosmopolitan life as a showman, took his part as bright and as clever as ever in the ring. Miss Florence, who gives the principal turn in the splendid programme of equestrian and ring novelties, is the intrepid young globe equilibrist who became famous by her marvellous feat of skill and endurance, journeying from London to Brighton on a ball. Her performance in the ring on the same ball includes the same startling feats of balance, juggling, and daring descent of a staircase that made her famous at the London Alhambra. Another star turn at this circus is Abex, the strong man, whose prodigious strength in weight-lifting out-Sandows Sandow, and marks him as one of our most marvellous athletes. There are equestrian turns, trained horses and ponies, and the inimitable Felix, the clown, as both jester and ringmaster by turns. We heartily wish every success to this excellent enterprise.

Ball's Midget Princess.

Next door to the circus was that gem of a ground-booth prodigy, E. Ball's Princess Lilliput. This charming and dainty atom of humanity held receptions daily.

Prof. Pearson's Boxers.

Fistiana still draws the manly and exuberant youth of our fair, and the school of boxers and athletes under Prof. Pearson included many local heroes of the fancy.

The Olla Podrida of the Wakes.

The New Wakes Ground.

Mr. John Collins had leased an admirable site for the wakes, and with his usual business acumen and enterprise gathered around him some of the very best concerns on the Lancashire round. Longsight has never before seen such an aggregation of high-class shows and machine novelties, and the people were quick to recognise and to appreciate such excellent catering for their amusement. Had the weather been better there is little doubt that the wakes of 1907 would have broken all previous records as regards business returns, as it undoubtedly has done as regards display and up-to-date show enterprise.

P. Collins and Son's Wonderland.

Right at the head of all cinematographs this concern maintains its proud position, both inside and out—the very best now exhibiting in this part of the country. The entertainment includes the latest and most refined films, living and speaking pictures, up to date.

Hodgini's Circus.

The Hodgini Family are famous equestrians and acrobats, and in their capital circus well maintain their reputation—an all-round excellent show. The equestrian turns by members of the Hodgini family and the capital company with them delighted the crowded audiences that patronised the circus. Feats of horsemanship, Risley and acrobatic turns, amusing clowns, and trained animals were the items of a delightful programme.

Wall's Midget Marvels.

That prince of the entresol show, Harry Wall, was one of the best patronised showmen at the fair, and deservedly so, for he provides the best and most interesting abnormals now travelling. The little people are prodigies of the most unique character. The exhibition in which they are shown is amongst the very best, brightest, and up to date of its kind. Nothing but the very best satisfies the proprietor.

White's Museum of Living Curios.

This kind of show is coming to the front, and White's museum of freak and nature marvels is a pioneer in this line of admirable exhibitions. The proprietor, Mr. White, is to be congratulated on the variety and interests of his exhibits and the perfect outfit of his show.

Roundabouts, Steam Yachts, &c.

The centre of the fair-ground was admirably planned to display the big crowd of machine novelties. These were P. Collins's No. 1 set of motors, the Gordon-Bennett race track (manager Mr. J. W. Hall), Mrs. W. Davies's ostriches and Cape Town ponies, J. Hibbert and Sons' racing cockerels and revolving chariots, J. Richards's steam yachts, Holmes's slipping the slope tower, J. H. Humphries' gem horses, and Montgomery's juvenile roundabouts.

Shooting Ranges and Batteries.

Hughes and Masters' range, Mrs. A. Jewell's two concerns, and galleries and ranges by Messrs. Burton, J. H. Humphries, and J. White.

Cokers, Dolly Frames, and Varieties.

These were provided by such well-known caterers as Clough, Jewell, Humphries, A. Whatmore, R. Dixon, C. Horton, J. Leonard, Cordwell Brothers, Richmond, Bettomy, Coats, Jepson, Smith, Montgomery, Harrison, and others, Barker's photo van, and R. Dixon, jun., Mulheson, and J. Montgomery's pannum stalls complete a list of fairground novelties that ranks with the best the country provides. We understand that the bulk of these novelties go to the Liverpool parks for the coming city pageant.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Haggar, jun., took their joint benefit at Neath on Monday. An old favourite, The Dumb Man of Manchester, was well staged, and Mr. Haggar and his talented wife had a very flattering reception. They resume their autumn season in October.

THE SHOWMEN'S GUILD AT MANCHESTER.

The organising chaplain of the Guild had a busy Sunday in Manchester on July 28. In the morning he preached at his former church of St. John the Baptist, Hulme. In the afternoon he visited most of the caravans on the two fair grounds at Longsight Wakes. In the evening he was the special preacher at St. Agnes Church, Hamilton-road, Longsight, the Parish Church of the fair. After evensong he preached again at the showmen's service in the Parish Room, a most suitable centre for the showpeople, being close by the fair.

At this service the Rev. H. Norburn, senior hon. local chaplain of the Guild, both took the service and read the lesson from Holy Scripture. The Guild chaplain, the Rev. T. Horne, in his sermon dwelt on the love of God as the incentive to and the bond of union in the Brotherhood of the Church. He applied the lesson to the special needs and temptations of a showman's life. The singing of the service was led by the choir boys of the parish. Several of the wardens and officers of the church, and many leading members of the congregation of St. Agnes, joined with the showpeople in the Guild service. A number of showpeople were at the Parish Church for evensong, and a great number came to their own special service.

At the end of the service the Rev. T. Horne (speaking to Guild members only) referred to the proposed Benefit to be taken from shows and roundabouts on the Tuesday in the Wakes week. This was heartily approved by all present. The rector, the Rev. H. Norburn, strongly urged showmen to support the good work of their own Guild. He instanced a striking local example of the benefit arising from having hon. local chaplains, who, from knowledge of their life and work, could defend them from the attack of ill-informed and prejudiced people. He trusted that their friend (and his friend) their good chaplain would be long spared to continue his work amongst them, and to a wider public for them.

Despite the fact that all the larger concerns on Mr. John Collins' Wakes Ground had already this season given benefit performances, either at Queen's-road or at Wrexham Fairs, the benefit idea was enthusiastically approved and carried through. From Mr. John Collins' machines at Queen's-road last Easter week the substantial sum of £10 was received; from J. Hibbert and Sons' machine £1; and from the providers of minor novelties—tenants of Mr. John Collins—£6 were taken in small subscriptions. From P. Collins' show and machines at Wrexham Fair £5 were taken as a benefit to the Guild Funds. In spite of the understanding that one show should only be expected to give a benefit once in a season, Mr. P. Collins, Mr. Hibbert, Mr. P. Collins, jun., and others determined to repeat their generous help, and to stand in with the others so that the benefit might be unanimous. The following appeal was placed on the front of each exhibition:—

The Showmen's Guild.—Organised for the benefit of all showmen. The entire proceeds of this performance will be given to the funds of the Guild.—Lord George Sanger, president; Rev. T. Horne, chaplain; Thomas Hurst, honorary secretary.

A similar placard was shown on each roundabout, the only material difference being that it stated that "All the takings of this machine for two hours to-night will be given to the Guild Funds."

The Result of the Benefit.

Mr. Fred Bibby (of J. Bibby and Co.) very ably assisted the organising chaplain in the pleasant duty of receiving and tabulating the results of the benefit performances at each concern. The separate amounts taken were as follows:—P. Collins' motor-cars, £2 2s.; P. Collins' Coliseum, £2 0s. 9d.; Mrs. W. Davies' gallopers, £1 8s. 9d.; Isaac Richards' yachts, £1 8s. 5d.; J. Hibbert and Sons' Bantams, 17s. 9d.; Harry Wall's Midgets, 12s. 4d.; Hodgini's Circus, 10s.; W. Holmes' slip, 5s.; White's Museum, 2s. 6d.

Subscriptions per Rev. T. Horne—J. Hibbert and Sons, £5; T. Worfolk, 5s. Per Mr. Whiting—C. Darwent, 5s.; J. Thorburn, 5s. Per Mr. Ashington—W. Bassett, 5s.; W. Blackburn, 5s.; H. Ashington, 5s.; Joseph Joy, 5s. Per Mr. Shaw—J. Moore, 5s.

DEATH OF AN OLD SHOWMAN.

A painfully sudden ending has come to the career of an old and most respected showman, Mr. Charles Parker, who for some months has been managing with great success the American Exhibition in Oxford-street, London. Mr. Parker, who was a truly energetic man, had attended to the exhibition, when a congested liver gave him trouble, and in a few days the illness terminated fatally.

Though of English birth, he early went to America, and there he saw such a development of show life that he always said the English had much to learn from their American brethren. Mr. Parker had been connected with the chief shows of America, and was a friend of Mr. Barnum, Mr. Bailey, Mr. Forepaw, and others whose exhibitions were the perfection of organisation. He had seen Mr. Keith, of America, rise from his five-cent show in Tremont-street, Boston, to be proprietor of eighteen of the best theatres in the land of the Stars and Stripes. Mr. Parker practically knew show business from A to Z, and he could tell the towns that were good for trade and the period of year to visit them. A talk with him was a lesson in showmanship, and he would not neglect a single detail. In the World's Fair, held at Chicago in 1893, he was in charge of a capital attraction, and saw immense profits secured.

With all his appreciation of American industry and energy and smartness, he nevertheless loved his own land, and so he often put in a month on our coast, while as to London as a show city, he considered it of the first importance. Buffalo Bill characterised London as a gold mine, and Parker practically endorsed the opinion of the eminent scout.

He was against shabbiness in show business, and there he was right, as in the street shows that Americans have opened in London there is smartness, decoration, liveried attendants, and abundant illumination. So people patronise them who never thought of paying the penny to see the fat lady in the shop. In his management of American shows in London streets Mr. Parker had found that the pennies and halfpence meant a splendid return, and, as he said, "Money is all over the place." He seemed good for many more years, but at the age of sixty-five he has passed away, and left the memory of a good showman with all those associated with him in providing public recreation. Several of his family remain in the business.

Salthorne Feast.

Here, to help the good people of this Yorkshire village to keep their feast right merrily, were the master fun-makers and the providers of the people's open-air amusements, H. Ashington, with the Marionette Répertoire Company and up-to-date animated and speaking pictures; Geo. Crampton, with steam roundabouts; Gray, with swings; Tomlinson, with rifle gallery; Blackburn, with coker sheet; and W. Bassett, with varieties.

Tipton Wakes.

Here were Sagar's palace of delight; Westwood, with the Colonial giant children; Cullis's fistic art pavilion; P. Collins's No. 1 racing motors; Mrs. Hayes's electric yachts and swings; Humphries' park swings and varieties; Chaplain's juvenile set and varieties; Dobson's miniature set and shooting range; throwing games and all the fun of the fair by Scarfe, Pouchery, Powell, Cooper, Hayes, Walton, Wagstaffe, and many others.

FILM GOSSIP.

Charles Urban Trading Co., Ltd.

This firm has just issued a budget of good things. In continuation of their highly successful series of national pictures—Bonnie Scotland and Beautiful Erin—they now announce a production of a number of animated pictures of the principal beauty spots of North Wales. The pictures are complete in five series, each notable as illustrating all that is lovely and interesting in the portion of the Principality to which it applies. They were secured during the present season by a staff of experts under the personal supervision of Mr. Charles Urban, and by reason of their photographic perfection, choice of subjects, and comprehensive treatment, they should command a world-wide enthusiastic reception.

Majestic mountain scenery, peaceful lakes, turbulent rivers, romantic cascades and waterfalls, fairy glens, ravines, wild moor and cultivated lowland, historic ruins, castles, and city walls, industries, railway panoramas, and coaching tours—all form a sum of general interest, beauty, and educational importance equal to that of any previous series. In order to depict these scenes in anything approaching a satisfactory manner, the London and North-Western Railway Company was approached, and very kindly placed special facilities at the disposal of Mr. Urban. By this means some exceptionally fine railway panoramas were obtained, and, naturally enough, the Urban Company, as well as the general public, will feel grateful to the L. and N.-W. R. Company for its assistance in the matter. The entire series will also show the operations in the gigantic State quarries at Dinorwic, and scenes of the ascent and descent of Snowden. Marvellous atmospheric and mist effects have been introduced, and the total results secured fully demonstrate the enlightening value of the cinematograph.

Pathé Frères.

Pathé Frères can boast their fair share of novelties, and on Thursday afternoon we had the pleasure of witnessing several of these. One, entitled Modern Painters, is a particularly smart trick film. On the floor of a stage a couple of portfolios are seen to move along, apparently without human aid, to the centre of a small proscenium, where the flat covers fall back, and out jump two men attired in the careless style with which artistic people in the Quartier Latin have made us familiar. Immediately they set to work on the semicircular border of the miniature proscenium, and the result is astonishing, to say the least. A few dabs with the brushes and figures of beautifully dressed young ladies appear before us. Other figures appear and disappear with the same mysterious rapidity.

The Maniac Juggler is another capital Pathé production. It shows a juggler too palpably gone mad. He rushes through the streets and juggles with everything he can get hold of, much to the annoyance of people he meets. He is chased by a crowd of people, who eventually run him to ground and express their appreciation of his remarkable abilities. Spanish Picture Postcards introduces us to many beautiful parts of King Alfonso's dominions as well as to places of historical and romantic interest. The "argument" is this: A lady visits a picture postcard shop, and is shown a great variety of coloured illustrations. What is put before the lady is thrown on the cinematograph screen, and the effect is both pleasing and instructive.

Chrysanthemums is a magnificently-coloured Pathé film, in which splendid specimens of the flower are brought into use in different ways. A Case of Arson is a well-arranged series of photographic illustrations, which tell a very dramatic story. The evening and night "effects" are realistically brought out, and the film is one that should find a ready sale. Nurse's Strike is still another attractive Pathé subject, the title being sufficiently suggestive of its character.

Vitagraph Company.

Lost in an Arizona Desert, just issued by the Vitagraph Company, is a very tragic and realistic film. The opening scene shows a wide stretch of the burning alkali desert of Arizona. In the distance a man and a woman appear, and as they draw nearer it can be seen that they are carrying a little child about two years of age. They stumble along, evidently exhausted, and it is clear that they have lost their way. Stopping to rest, the man raises a flask to his lips, then (thinking of his wife) he overcomes the terrible craving and offers the flask to her. She shakes her head and points to the child. The man understands, and they raise the bottle to the parched lips of the little one, and then slowly and painfully resume their aimless wandering. At each step the unfortunate couple grow weaker and weaker, until finally the man sinks to the ground. With a despairing gesture he bids farewell to the woman and child, and expires. The wretched woman picks up the little child and drags slowly on. She has not gone far, however, when the terrible heat overcomes her and she falls lifeless. The little girl is too young to know that the mother is dead, but after failing to arouse her the child wanders away. A cowboy, riding along, catches sight of the emaciated figure of a woman, rides up, hastily dismounts, and upon finding that her life is extinct, reverently covers her with his blanket and rides away. A little further along he perceives the child, picks her up, and rides away. In the end the miners and cowboys at the camp adopt the child.

Father's Quiet Sunday, published by the Vitagraph, is intensely amusing. Paterfamilias is tired out with a hard week's work, and decides to rest all day on Sunday. He warns his wife, daughter, and servant to keep the house absolutely quiet while he sleeps. They leave, and father makes himself comfortable on the sofa, has just covered his face with a large handkerchief, and is preparing to enjoy a well-earned rest when a terrific noise causes him to jump up and he sees about a dozen boys having a parade and using tin-pans, drums, etc. He yells to them to be quiet, and is just dropping off to sleep again when a strenuous hammering occurs in the back yard. Every time he gets almost to sleep something happens to disturb him. The telephone rings and the servant knocks on the door to tell him about it. Daughter No. 1 plays the piano in the room on the right, while daughter No. 2 takes half a dozen of her friends into the room on the left and starts a phonograph. Four of his boon companions arrive, and commence a quiet little game of poker. This is too much for father. He hurries into the next room, and as the picture closes we see him sitting at the table joining in the game and apparently enjoying his Sunday rest.

The Vitagraph Co. is also responsible for The Window Demonstration. A window dresser is arranging a display of rainproof rubber coats and hats, and for this purpose has procured a dummy figure wearing the rubber garments. After having placed this figure he turns on a shower bath above the dummy, the water running off the coat and hat, showing that they are indeed waterproof. Next the window dresser brings in another dummy, which he places upon a pair of artificial legs. After uncovering same, it proves to be a female figure showing a new style of corset. As soon as the window dresser retires a remarkable change takes place in the male dummy. He begins to wink his eyes, his fingers twitch and his arms move in a jerky fashion.

Walturdaw Company.

Visitors to the Palace Theatre on Wednesday and Thursday evenings this week have been greatly interested in witnessing the Walturdaw Company's pictures of the races for the Goodwood Plate and Cup, the films being a particularly beautiful series. The company have sent down some of their most expert operators to Cowes for the purpose of taking pictures of the review of the fleet by the King and of the individual warships. Mr. J. E. Hutton, the winner of the first Brooklands motor race, has very kindly placed special facilities at the disposal of the Walturdaw people by allowing their photographers on board his motor boat. Everything that is of interest will be reproduced by the camera, and we are promised some very attractive numbers, which will be seen at the Palace on Monday.

AMUSEMENTS IN PIETERMARITZBURG.

PIETERMARITZBURG, July 5, 1907.—Scott's Theatre.—The Leonard Rayne Dramatic company is here this week with The Bondman. As Jason M. Leonard Rayne presented a thoroughly finished study; Michael Sunlocks was in the capable hands of Mr. A. E. Greenaway; Mr. H. C. Paine made a manly Adam Fairbrother; Mr. E. Burton Seymour as Governor Testa brought out the subtlety of the part; Father Ferratti had an able exponent in Mr. Charles Howitt. As Mrs. Fairbrother Miss Annie Leaf caused much amusement, and was ably assisted by Mr. C. Hermann Pullen as Grandfather. The Greba of Miss Gertrude F. Godart was a complete success. The staging was all that could be desired.

THEATRICAL PATENTS.

The following abridged description is specially compiled for The Era by Messrs. Hughes and Young, registered patent agents and engineers, of 55-56, Chancery-lane, London, W.C., from whom our readers may obtain information and advice free of charge:—

No. 8,248.—Theatrical appliance. M. Fortuny, 19, Boulevard Berthier, Paris.—This invention relates to a concave background for use on the stage for improving acoustic properties of buildings, and is formed by exhausted air spaces between two sheets of fabric, the inner of which is attached at its edges to a curved framework, the outer being attached to framework concentric with the former. Curved stays are provided to sustain the outer sheet and prevent it from coming into contact with the inner. The stays are attached to a web, so that they may be folded up when the background is not in use, thus enabling it to be drawn up into the flies. The air is exhausted by a fan. As a variation, the sheet can be attached to the walls of the building, utilising the same for the background.

CRICKET.

Hercules XI. v. Mr. S. Salter's "Terriers."

At Champion Hill Grounds on July 26 the Hercules XI. met and defeated Mr. S. Salter's "Terriers." The first four wickets put up a score of 139 runs, thanks to the fine stand by Messrs. Pye and Davis; the remaining wickets fell very cheaply, the collapse being brought about by the fine bowling of Johnson. The Terriers opened their innings disastrously, Davis taking a wicket in his first over, when the score registered 1. The batsmen that followed were none to confident, and only Messrs. Fossey, Barker, and Williams were able to reach double figures. Garbett took four wickets for 28 runs and Davis four for 30. Scores:—Hercules XI.: M. Danagger, 26; C. John, 16; A. Garbett, 10; W. Davis, 53; J. Pye, 30; G. Cook, 13; M. Cohen, 3; N. Smart, 4; A. Wellson, 3 not out; P. Bavin, 0; E. Peachey, 0; extras 8; total, 166. Mr. S. Salter's "Terriers": H. Stebbing, 6; S. Johnson, 0; F. Clements, 8; F. Fossey, 10; F. Barker, 12; B. Williams, 12; W. Dunkley, 1; A. Pearson, 2; Leon Bassett, 2; Tobey, 0; S. Salter, not out, 1; extras 5; total 64.

Kinross, Scotland.

For this fair the following concerns foregathered:—The cinematograph theatres of Mackney, Manders, and King; fistiana and athletic shows of Lavin and Steward; Wilmot's motors; Palmer's swings and shooter; the shooters of Rostron and Dawson; and Strand's varieties.

Mr. Alf. Ball, whose travelling variety show, The New Lyceum, is known throughout the country, has just finished a successful eight weeks' run at Tilbury. The latest acquisition of this enterprising showman is the largest orchestrophone in the world, built by Gariola of Paris, at a cost of £2,500.

This marvellous piece of mechanism plays everything, from grand opera to sacred songs. Last Wednesday and Thursday Mr. Ball devoted the whole of his proceeds to philanthropic purposes, Wednesday to the Protestant and Catholic missions, and Thursday to the Tilbury Cottage Hospital. On each night money was refused at both houses. Mr. Harry Banford, as stage-manager, had plenty to do, as, in addition to his own popular turn, he had the arrangements in hand. In addition to Mr. Ball's own company, consisting of Miss Lucy Gray, Miss Flo Radley, and Mme. Pauline (the smallest serio in the world), the following came over from Gravesend to lend their services to Mr. Ball:—Mr. Percy Wylde, Mr. H. C. Woodrow, Miss Flo Raynor, and Miss Annie Rave. Mr. Ball, jun., ably manipulated the bioscope with several up-to-date and popular films, and the enthusiastic audiences were well satisfied. The champion of Mitcham Fair is to be heartily congratulated on his enterprise.

Messrs. Bostock and Wombwell's No. 1 menagerie visits the Little Roodee, Chester, to-day (Saturday). Good business is sure to result, the show having been well advertised by the agent-in-advance, Mr. Arthur Dashwood. His catch poster, "Have you seen the devil?" has attracted great attention.

The Pavilion, Ventnor, has been recently rebuilt, and the transformation that has been effected is remarkable. The floor is now carpeted, and furnished with richly-upholstered easy chairs, and has the appearance of a large and luxuriously-furnished drawing-room.

Mr. Geo. Kirke, whose luck as a fisherman is still in, had a phenomenal catch last week near Bolton, when he secured one brace of 8½lb., several weighing 2lb. One day's basket alone amounted to over 30lb., and in the five days over 80lb. of fish were landed.

The holiday company at the South London Palace will include Tom Costello, Kahn and Kahn, Billy McClain, May Mars, George Newburn, Prof. Dunning, W. Lee and company, the Athos Troupe, Ruffell's Bioscope, and Alexandra Dagmar.

RE APPLICATIONS FOR ENGAGEMENTS

All applications by either Artists or their Agents must be made to the Head Office.

Lowest terms must be stated, and distinction made between salaries required for larger and smaller towns.

Vacant dates should be stated. If a list of existing bookings be sent, it will render selection easier.

Artists employing Agents should accredit one only at one time, as the friction arising when several Agents are employed at the same time, all expecting the one booking to go through each of them, often renders it expedient to avoid that booking altogether rather than give undeserved offence to several Agents.

New Acts seeking Engagements, or turns not re-booked (possibly because they have played a series of dates without introducing new business), will facilitate matters by having their acts seen by our District Managers. Their Districts and Postal Addresses are as follow:—

EDINBURGH, GLASGOW, NEWCASTLE, AND DISTRICT.
MR. S. GETHING,
Empire Theatre, Glasgow.

LEEDS, SHEFFIELD, HULL, BRADFORD, AND DISTRICT.
MR. T. GERALD MORTON,

MR. WILLIAM COLLINS,
The Empire, Shepherd's Bush, W.

N.B.—Mr. OSWALD STOLL or Mr. FRANK ALLEN can be seen by appointment on all matters arising out of the above, and for the discussion of entirely new Numbers.

All Artists or Agents who communicate with our District Representatives must have made definite applications, in accordance with above directions, to the Head Office, at the same time, or just previously.

THIS WEEK'S NOVELTIES.

THE MANIAC JUGGLER. Code Word, COLONEL.

A clown, slightly off his head, does the most amusing and curious things with his hat, stick, boots, etc., etc. Going into a restaurant, he proceeds in like manner with the knives, forks, and would much like to take up the waiters and other people; but, this not being possible, he picks up a small baby and throws it about, much to the delight and alarm of the onlookers.

577ft. The Subject, £9 12s. 4d.

THE NURSES' STRIKE. Code Word, COMPERE.

626ft. The Subject, £10 8s. 8d.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS. Code Word, CIME.

Great clusters of gorgeous chrysanthemums, with here and there dear little Chinese lanterns. Groups of masked people and laughing-eyed mousmes file in long processions, making a delightful set of pictures of a truly Japanese character. Magnificently coloured throughout.

230ft. The Subject, £3 16s. 8d. Colouring, £2 15s.

MODERN PAINTERS. Code Word, CHOQUANT.

Two untidy-looking "daubers," with long hair and eccentric manners, step out of their portfolios and begin to work. The rate at which they produce the most lovely pictures, one after another, is really surprising. Charming film.

A CASE OF ARSON. Code Word, COFFRE.

Do not miss this story of daring. A band of wild-looking men and women. A quiet little village. Houses burnt to the ground, peasants beaten and frightened. The thieves prosper for awhile, but the peasants give chase and get the upper hand. Bullets fly, and there is cruelty and bloodshed. The thieves take refuge in a miserable den, but in a quarrel between two women one sets fire to some powder and blows the whole place up. Wonderful and striking scenes. A new method of tinting has enabled us to give some wonderful effects.

808ft. The Subject, £13 8s. 8d. Colouring, £1 12s.

SPANISH VIEWS. Code Word, COLCOTAR.

Splendid views of Spain and Spanish life on postcards. Very fascinating.

LIFE OF GARIBALDI.

This is a most interesting film, it shows the wonderful scenery of Italy, not to be excelled, with its mountains, lakes, and towns. The thrilling events in the life of this great "maker of modern Italy," his soldiers, the battles, the beginning and ending of his great work, about which so much has been written, in fact the whole history of this famous General, are brought before us. This film should be popular with every audience, being quite different to any other now on the market.

Father is tired out—had a hard week—decides to rest all day Sunday—lies down—boys out in back yard get up a tin pan parade—the hired girl chops wood and a piece flies through the window—Pa's daughters enjoy themselves—one plays the piano and sings—the other plays the phonograph and it sings—then father sings—every time he gets quiet something disturbs him. Finally, just when he is on the verge of collapse, four of his boon companions arrive and start up a poker game in the next room—this is too much for father—he forgets all about wanting to sleep and gets into the game without delay. A FIRST-CLASS COMEDY FILM.

PROVINCIAL THEATRICALS.

ABERDEEN.—His Majesty's Theatre.—Managing Director, Mr. Robert Arthur; Acting-Manager, Mr. H. Adair Nelson.—Walker, London, is enthusiastically received this week. Mr. Edward A. Coventry plays dashingly as Jasper Phipps; Mr. W. Rene Hammersmith represents Renard Von Burg exceedingly well; Mr. Harry Glenney makes a hit as Kit Upjohn; and Mr. Forrester Harvey is an excellent "W. G." All the ladies play vivaciously, Miss Ruby Wyndham (Mrs. Golightly), Miss Ethel Crawford (Bell Golightly, B.A.), Miss Ruhamah Catton (Nancy O'Brien), Miss Ethel Stanley, and Miss Jennie Douglas-Hick each receiving unstinted applause from the audiences. Walker is preceded by Mr. Pinero's Hester's Comedy, which is admirably acted.

Palace Theatre.—Lessees, United Company Theatres, Ltd; Manager, Mr. Walter Gilbert.—The great event of the week is the appearance of the Elliots and Savonas, whose performances are as noteworthy and as rapturously received as ever. Among other members of the company who appear with success may be noted the Brothers Robson, eccentric comedians and dancers; Wright and Lawson, acrobatic grotesques; the Three Sisters McQueen, harmonising vocalists; the Columbia Comedy Trio; Mr. H. Lamb, Scottish comedian; and Miss Belle Harcourt, comedienne.

Beach Pavilion.—Manager and Proprietor, Mr. David Thomson.—This admirable entertainment continues to be largely patronised. All the members of the company are possessed of high artistic talent. Among them are Mr. David Thomson, a Scottish comedian of rare ability; Miss Violet Davidson, Miss Minnie Osborne, and Miss Lottie Stewart (accompanist), and Messrs. Oswald Grey and Jack Belton. The singing is infinitely above the average, and the artists also act cleverly a number of smart and amusing sketches. Variety is lent to the programme by the entertaining conjuring tricks of Mervant and the melodious performances of Cambo, the "man-monkey," on a variety of musical instruments.

ABERTILLERY.—Theatre Metropole.—Lessees, Messrs. Carlton and Duckworth; Resident-Manager, Mr. Geo. W. Ventom.—A splendid attraction has been secured for the re-opening of this theatre for the season in Mr. Herbert Barrs and his powerful company, in Wanted by the Police. As Phillip Stanhope, Mr. W. Collins was seen to fine effect; whilst as the loving trusting wife Miss Dorothy Oswald elicited warm applause. Mr. Ronald Graham as Richard Crawford was excellent; Mr. Edward Cheetham as Silas Underwood is to the life; Mr. Herbert Barrs was admirable as Nunkey Snarl; Mr. Duncan Bell as Dr. Foster and Mr. G. Esdaile as P.C. Roberts were both capital; Miss Edna Hana as Florence Fordyce was excellent; Miss Maudie Vincent as Molly and Mr. James F. Firth as Charley Sparrow worked well and produced much merriment.

The Pavilion.—Lessees, Messrs. E. and H. Tilney; Manager, Mr. E. Pryce.—This house was opened on Monday night last for variety business with a specially attractive bill and drew crowded audiences. Miss Daisy Morell made a successful appearance, and elicited much applause for her singing and patter. The Villions gave a very clever turn with cycling and acrobatic feats, the lady's performance being wonderfully clever; the Avolos gave a startling and pleasing performance on the perpendicular pole; the Musical Keiths left nothing to be desired in their novel musical turn; Thornbury is a clever exponent of painting in sand, smoke, and oil; Miss Violet Nunn, a charming coon singer; J. C. Daniels, comedian and clog dancer; and a capital series of pictures on the bioscope complete.

ABERYSTWYTH.—Colisseum.—During this week Poole's ever-popular Myriorama and Animated Pictures, together with a number of variety artists, are drawing crowded houses. The entertainment throughout is excellent, there being not a dull moment from start to finish.

ACCRINGTON.—Prince's Theatre.—Proprietor, Mr. J. B. Ormerod; Acting-Manager, Mr. J. E. Barnes.—Mr. G. Kirk's and Miss Mary Neil's company opened on Monday with Her Luck in London. Miss Mary Neil was most successful as Nellie Harborne; Miss Francis Bruce made a good impression as Lilian Harborne; Miss Florrie Groves was good as Maud Gladys; Misses Daisy Moss, Queenie Lamont, and Kitty Gerald, as the "Evening Stars," deserve praise. Mr. T. Power must be complimented for his performance as Stephen Harborne; Fitzgerald O'Connor was well depicted by Mr. Stephen Langdon; Mr. George was good as Richard Lenown; Mr. D. Tremain made an ideal Rev. Mr. Strong; and Mr. Bruce Chapman was well cast as Algie Kircumbele.

ALDERSHOT.—Hippodrome.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. Clarence Sounes; Resident-Manager, Mr. Jack Gladwin.—Dolly Denton is a trim little comedienne and dancer, who sings "Down in the ocean" very nicely, and dances to perfection. Stelling and his canine comedian, Kiswaski, are a most entertaining pair; Newham and Latimer, burlesque artists, make a good hit in dance and song; on the wire Johnny Fuller is clever and swift, and he introduces a series of acrobatic tricks and dancing tit-bits; the charming Sisters Cora are seen to advantage in the duet, "Would you care if I left you?" and later in the coon song, "I'm going back to Borneo," both being exceedingly pretty dancers. "The Tired Comedian" is how the programme styles Harry Rogerson, and when he dances on to the stage with three legs he tickles the gallery; the Greyson Comedy Trio successfully appear in their original act, entitled The Dummy.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE.—Theatre Royal.—Sole Owner and Manager, Mr. Chas. Revill; Acting-Manager, Mr. Wm. Revill.—This week we have a novelty drama, The Life of a Showman, the joint authorship of Messrs. Chas. Darrell and George Testo Santé. There is a big dramatis personæ, and the chief characters are enacted with a plentiful display of individual talent and skill by Mr. Chas. Osborne, as owner of a South African diamond mine; Mr. Morris Maudas, his Boer secretary, who ten years afterwards we find a rich English landowner; Mr. Edward Wooden, as chaplain to the mine, and subsequently as Vicar of Greenstreet. There are a number of other characters who figure prominently in the series of scenes, notably Mr. Frank Santé as a circus acrobat, and afterwards as the circus proprietor; and Messrs. C. Clements, J. G. Santé, Turner, Price, Porter, Sam, and others. The leading ladies of the piece are Miss Constance Medwyn as Agatha Winter, the supposed wife of the Boer secretary; Miss Lizzie Power, as Lynette, the acrobat's motherless daughter; Miss E. Bamford as Lena, the billposter's daughter; and Miss May Neilson as Angelina, a mountain of adipose tissue. Mr. Jose Santé proves an accomplished player of the violin in the first act. The famous Bros. Testo appear along with Comical Walker.

Empire Hippodrome.—Proprietors, Messrs. W. H. Broadhead and Son; Resident Acting-Manager, Mr. W. Leech.—The Kurios, with their Komical Konception of Komicalities, introducing pantomime, art, mystery, &c., create abundance of merriment in the audience. Allen and Hall, comedians, appear in laughable sketch, The Troublesome Scotty; the object all through the absurdity is to provoke laughter. There is also the screaming absurdity, The Captain's Daughter. Hilda Leigh and Co., with Willie Leigh as Christopher Broom, enact the characters successfully; Chanti reappears with new business. He describes himself as the marvellous electrical, mechanical, protean artist; J. Ingram Howard and Dorothy Wallace keep the audience entertained with Taming a Wife. Pictures are shown of the Victoria Falls, &c. Other turns are May Newall, a dainty singer of charming songs; Chris Van Bern, in songs, "The surprise party," &c.; Lerna Lyle, singer of variety songs; and Maidge Allen, also a vocalist.

ATTERCLIFFE.—Theatre Royal, Lyd.—Managing-Director, Mr. Frank Macnaghten; Resident-Manager, Mr. Chris A. Wordsworth.—So great has been the success which the picture entertainments have been accorded here that they are still being continued, with Miss Nellie Burke as vocalist.

Palace Theatre of Varieties.—Proprietor, Mr. T. Allan Edwardes; Acting-Manager, Mr. J. Lacy Lyne; Assistant-Manager, Mr. Bert Lester.—A big Bank Holiday audience filled this popular house on Monday evening. Mr. Frank E. Burdett's excellent company are deserving of high praise for the able manner in which they render the picturesque military sketch, Mutiny which was received with hearty applause. The Bohemians are instrumentalists and comedy artists of ability; Miss Lily Sharplin gives several imitations of music hall celebrities; the Three Ringlings are clever tumblers and cake-walkers on stilts; Mr. Edward Ind makes himself popular as a vocal comedian; the Paragon Trio contribute a pleasing item, their harmonising of popular songs being excellent; Mr. Clayton's pictures are up to the usual standard; and Mr. Charles Rowen, comedian, completes the bill.

BAGUP.—New Court Theatre.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. Frank Denman-Wood.—Miss Lois Du Cane's company is here in The Heathen and the Christian. Mr. Ernest G. Batley as Lord Allendale gives a forcible and telling performance; the part of Joshua Sampson is well taken by Mr. Beatty; Mr. Gerald Blake furnishes a good impersonation of Admiral Freehold; Mr. H. B. Lewis as George Beresford does full justice to the character; Mr. Sam Harcourt as Lung Hi is well placed. Miss Lois Du Cane as May Beresford delights her audience by her clever assumption of the character; and Miss Etty C. Murray as Mira Sampson displays much malignant intensity; Mr. A.
